

T. EATON CO. LIMITED "CANADA'S GREATEST STORE."

Friday Bargains. People look to these columns for information about this store, and we see to it that no one is disappointed. That's why we exercise the greatest care in printing our daily store news. Every statement must be accurate and goods exactly as represented. No room here for exaggeration. Our stocks are too large and too complete. Many times we do scant justice to their goodness and excellence. But we prefer having people come to the store and find out for themselves.

THE TORONTO WORLD ONE CENT MORNING PAPER. No. 88 YONGE STREET, Toronto.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The President's message, however it may be viewed, has cast upon Congress the duty of initiating action to stop the war in Cuba. In December last, a similar communication was made by the Executive, recommending that the Government of Senor Sagasta be given ample opportunity to carry into effect its decrees offering practical autonomy to Cuba. In that document there was an elaborate discussion of the effect of recognizing the Cuban insurgents as a de facto power. It was pointed out that such a course would entail on the United States the difficult and complicated duty of exacting from both contending parties the strict observance of their rights and obligations. One of these rights was that of search of the high seas of neutral vessels, and the interruption of the trade in arms and munitions of war then being carried on by American vessels. This state of affairs would, it was urged, give the present Government of Spain a great advantage, as she alone possessed an adequate naval force in Cuban waters.

The present message reiterates, though with less detail, that position and takes its stand upon intervention on so-called humanitarian grounds. While this is put in the forefront, the reasons given assert other considerations which are more easy of comprehension. They are, firstly, that American citizens and their property are endangered; secondly, that American trade, commerce and business is interfered with; and thirdly, that to allow a fight going on close at hand under similar circumstances, they may be true in fact, but they afford no legal justification for war.

In truth the humanitarian argument, from an international point of view, carries the matter no further. It is no doubt true that a private citizen, annoyed by lights next door in which some one is getting injured, may be justified in interfering, but he may do so only in aid of the civil power until it can act. Here there are no international police to be called in, and the United States, if it does anything, must bear the whole burden of its action. The line to be drawn is a fine one, perhaps, but the horrors of insurrection and war have never been sufficient as an excuse for armed intervention, where the power concerned is itself lawfully carrying on operations against the insurgents.

In Europe the nations have recognized this qualification, although they have collectively interposed to prevent bloodshed. The sole excuse put forward for the proposal to interfere in Armenia was that the Turkish Government was not taking proper military steps to subdue anarchy, but was allowing its forces to act as they pleased. It is not to be denied that the Turkish Government is in Crete the object in view in forming a cordon composed of the fleets of the great powers was to prevent Greece attacking the Turks because of alleged misgovernment in that island.

President McKinley stands on very uncertain ground at present, and to it is due no doubt the weakness of his present message. He is forced to a position that the nation is disturbed in business and comfort by the neighboring war, and that for its own interests that war must stop. If Congress adopts his view then they undertake to prove that they are strong enough to teach another nation how to deal with their own anarchy. The Monroe doctrine has been undergoing much expansion of late. Its application to Venezuela required its extension to the point that the boundaries of South American States were of consequence to the Republic.

The present situation goes further, and asserts that war in the dependencies of the European powers on this side of the Atlantic must be so conducted as not to interfere with American commerce, or with American views of how it should be waged.

The President does not quote any of the historical precedents to which his message alludes. Perhaps because they do not afford happy parallels to his proposed course. If humanitarian forces upon the United States the duty of the police, then she undertakes a most responsible duty. She cannot object to any other nation taking part in any civil struggle within her own border, if in its opinion the American army does not make war without bloodshed and devastation.

The position may be a difficult one, but it cannot be said that, viewed in the light of any previous transactions, Congress can find justification or precedent for armed intervention.

THE NORTH TORONTO DEADLOCK.

The proper authority to intervene in the deadlock which delays the extension of the Street Railway service to Mount Pleasant Cemetery is the Ontario Legislature. One electric railway legislation is incomplete inasmuch as it makes no provision for compelling one electric line to afford running rights over its tracks to another company. The legislation as it stands assumes that an electric railway is a purely local concern, affecting merely the particular municipality in which it is located. As a matter of fact the electric railway is more than a municipal or local question. The electric railway has become an intricate municipal matter, and before long it will attain to provincial importance.

The Legislature failed to consider the electric railway from this larger point of view, and the result is that the public interest and convenience has been sacrificed. The deadlock in North Toronto affords an instance of the difficulty. The people of the city desire to travel up Yonge-street beyond the city limits. The residents of York Township wish to come down from that municipality into the centre of the city. When, however, the passenger wishes the limits of the municipality he finds a fence has been erected. He has to get out of the car when he comes to the boundary, hang around the frontier for fifteen or twenty minutes, board another car and pay a double fare. The situation at North Toronto is similar to that at Niagara Falls on a reduced scale, only it is more aggravating because the annoyance is of more frequent occurrence. What the Legislature should do is to devise some machinery for overcoming this difficulty. Such machinery should take the form of a board of arbitrators or a railway commission, which should have power to decide upon what terms one line shall have running rights over another. Such a commission would straighten out the North Toronto deadlock within a week. As it is the difficulty is left to settle itself with the prospect of no settlement being arrived at, if one is reached, it promises to be a very clumsy one. The proposed route to Mount Pleasant Cemetery, via Avenue-road, is circuitous, indirect and otherwise objectionable. The proper route is straight up Yonge-street, and passengers should be taken to the cemetery along that route without transferring at the municipal boundary line. A railway commission would have no difficulty in deciding the terms upon which the two companies interested could use each other's lines. The North Toronto deadlock can never be considered settled until we have a continuous and uninterrupted service from one end of Yonge-street to the other. Even if the Avenue-road extension should go through it will be nothing more than a makeshift. They seem to manage these matters more sensibly in other places. In Montreal the cars for each suburban town as LaSalle, Outremont and Back River come directly to the centre of the city, and leave from the same point. There is no transfer at the municipal boundary. The same system prevails at Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit and other cities. As the companies concerned in Toronto cannot settle the matter themselves the public convenience clearly demands interference on the part of the Government by the enactment of a general law covering this and all similar cases.

A handsome cloth-bound copy for 50 stamps.

W. J. Malcom, of Knobel, Clay County, Arkansas, writes:
"Since I last wrote you we have had a baby girl born to us. My wife took your 'Preventive Medical Discovery' and she was able to bring up the child in the best of health. A younger, healthier child was the result, and she has been a year of age and has not had a day of sickness. It is a fact, sir, and we have had to be up with her as often as twice at night since her birth."
