

Mr. Hyde had corns
... Dr. Jekyll had none!

At the root of many a bad temper, there's a corn. It is hard to keep the disposition serene when a corn is jabbing and biting it with pain. You can cover the tip of a corn with a match-head. But this tiny pain-center makes one feel mean all over—and act that way. Doctors know that a corn may irritate the whole nervous system—so the patient with a corn is told to use Blue-jay. A Blue-jay plaster will end a corn pain in ten seconds, and the corn itself in 48 hours.

Phillip's Sociable Unprecedented Success

The Evening Telegram.
Mr. Str.—Will you kindly insert following. On the evening of April 18th the doors of L.O.L. No. 44 of Phillip's were thrown open to the public for the purpose of innocent amusement and relaxation, after the usual solemn days of Lent just through. Never before in the history of the place was a hall more thronged or an object more highly patronized.

The entertainment began at 8 p.m. with an appropriate address from our Rev. A. T. Tulk, who honoured with his presence, and was kind enough to act the part of Chairman to help us out. The Rev. Mr. Tulk's address followed by a concert programme, which consisted of about 15 items humorous and otherwise. Perhaps, as the concocter of the programme, I should be allowed to say that the programme was a success. However, to judge by the applause which greeted the efforts of the artists, it is safe to say that none of us bore beyond endurance or in any way of losing their heads with any of the programme.

While the programme was being given, the audience all had a chance to enjoy themselves, as the items were from a sentimental to a comic. Could the author of the "Silent Film" have seen one of our bands, Moses Squires acting his part, he would have had a fit. Probably the most enjoyed parts of the programme were the band selections, which were totally unexpected by the audience. The beauty which music can give to a band and the progress of a couple of months was an agreeable surprise to our hearers. Many were heard to comment on the able way in which the bandmaster and teacher, Mr. F. T. Tulk, led us out. He began his address to us in February past. At that time most of us would not have known him from a wire hoop, but we feel well on the way to know him now.

Mr. Spencer has worked very hard. Besides his daily vocation, he has been giving nearly all his nights to his band. He has entered heart and soul into the life of the place, and well he should, for the respect and good wishes of all who know him here. In the name of the brotherhood I wish to thank him a hearty vote of thanks for the considerable share he took in our concert a success.

The concert, which ended at 11.30 p.m., was followed by the customary refreshments and tea. It will be remembered that the former was a success and the rising orb supplied his radiant light for two last sets of quadrilles. The evening without a hitch, except for a couple of teatime, who, however, principle enough to apologize for the slight breaches of etiquette. The net proceeds amounted to $70.00, which will be devoted to beautifying appearance of our Hall, and also making our small band more comfortable than it is at present. Besides our people, many of our esteemed friends from the city and also from the presence, and it is hoped that the troupe I represent, I wish to thank all for their patronage of the people's efforted entertainment. Mr. Editor, I think I have up a push of your valuable paper, for which I thank you, so that your paper every success and reading public the compliments of a loyal season, I remain,
Yours truly,
G. S. SQUIRES.

How Birds Count

Four young swallows launched themselves from their nest and settled in line on a barn-roof. One of the parents began feeding them in turn, beginning from the one on the left—No. 1 and worked down the line to No. 4. Presently No. 4 shifted his position, to between Nos. 1 and 2, as if to gain earlier attention. But the next time the parent worked along the line she fed No. 1 first, as before, then fed the two on the right of the line before tending the one which changed place, thus giving him a lesson in bird morals.

The incident throws a light on a question of curious study. "How far can mother birds recognize their young? That they may be deceived easily is indicated by the story of a cuckoo of India, the Koel. The male is glossy black, the female a mottled brown; and the young, instead of resembling their mother, as is usual, are black. This cuckoo is a parasite, making a victim of the black starling called Myna. The starling accepts the cuckoo's offspring, but it would kill the little black cuckoo if it were dressed in brown feathers.

On finding twelve or sixteen titmice in one nest, we may wonder if the parents recognize them all, and if they manage to distribute their food evenly. They may be helped in knowing which birds need food by the position of the young ones in the nest. But we can hardly suppose that a pheasant with twenty chicks takes a daily roll-call, and so finds out if any are missing. This fearless bird will lead her callow brood over a dyke which she can manage to cross herself, but in too deep or wide for most of her chicks. When some of them scramble over, she will unconcernedly go on her journey, leaving others behind and to their fate.

GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

Kidney disease is dangerous unless checked. Gin Pills will remedy all kidney troubles. Get a box to-day before it is too late.

Gamekeepers often hold a theory that rooks and other clever birds can only count up to one, and cannot subtract one from two and leave one. If one man goes to a rookery, for example to shoot the rooks, the birds will be suspicious and will keep away, whereas if two men go openly and one walks ostentatiously away the rooks think the coast is clear.

Bird photographers who use hiding-tents often attempt the same ruse, taking an accomplice as far as the tent which they have set up before the bird's nest.

But the eagle will not be deceived by this stratagem, and travelers' tales assure us that he can take three from four and leave one. The writer recently gained some information about the shooting of eagles in Roumania, where the plan is to throw bait on the ground and shoot the birds from a shelter. If four men go into the shelter and three retire, the eagle will not come to the bait; but if five the eagle will swoop down to its dinner, and its doom—"Cassell's Weekly."

Labor Revolt in Britain Denied

LONDON, April 13.—The revolt against Ramsay MacDonald's leadership of the Labor party by the rank and file of his followers is daily becoming more and more pronounced. This was especially evident at the congress of the International Labor party which has just closed its sessions when a decision was reached to refer back the report on the Zinovieff letter to the committee which has been deliberating the matter ever since the general election, with the understanding that the matter should be more fully probed. This resolution is generally regarded as a mild rebuke to the former Labor Premier, and a vote of censure on his leadership.

It is been quite apparent for some time past that several of the most influential of MacDonald's lieutenants have not seen eye to eye with him and that local leaders have shown an even greater hostility to the domination of Labor by the intellectuals and the moderates. Reports from all parts of the country give evidence of a determination to go into battle on the next occasion under a more adroit and less self-satisfied leader than MacDonald proved himself to be last November.

It is feared in moderate circles that if this movement gains much momentum it will be impossible for the moderates to continue to dictate Labor policies, and in that case the direction of the movement would fall into the hands of the extremists and the Reds, of whom the Clyde school are the most noted adherents. This, it is believed generally, would have a disastrous effect not only on Labor itself but on the country generally.

Conquering Mt. Logan

McCARTHY, Alaska.—(Can. Press)—The attempt to conquer Mount Logan, highest peak in Canadian territory, will not be accomplished this summer by the Canadian Alpine Club without extreme difficulty. Captain A. H. MacCarthy, leader of the expedition, is now musing his way toward the glacier, where he will establish a supply base, and already he has had a bitter taste of the perils ahead.

The storm king has added its force to the other elements of nature that are harrassing the advance party. This part of Alaska and British Columbia has not experienced such severe weather in years as visited here in January and February. The snow is banked in deep drifts and when the MacCarthy party, with a four-horse team and three dog teams reached Hubrichs on February 27, they reported that the temperature had averaged nearly 35 degrees below zero, with an almost steady wind.

MacCarthy has pushed on toward the glacier base with his dog teams.

For more than five miles he had to travel along a narrow track, high up on the face of the bare slope, dropping almost perpendicularly into a deep, open stream. When he reaches the glacier itself, he will find the travelling even harder, because there is less snow there and the rocks are showing in many places. A change in the plan has been made necessary owing to the weather conditions and the inability of the advance party to make faster progress. Seven thousand pounds more to feed will have to be taken along for the horses and dogs. When the supply base is once established, MacCarthy will return here to meet the main party, and the actual assault on the mountain will be made in June or July.

New Steel Homes Go Up Like Magic

Urgent need of houses that can be rented at prices a workman can afford to pay, has brought about a new type of steel home in Great Britain, principally in Scotland. They can be erected, largely by unskilled labor, almost overnight.

Three motor-trucks are said to be sufficient to carry the materials for a complete house from the factory to the site. No excavation is necessary and the parts are easily put together. Some of the buildings with six rooms are now being erected for about $2200 each, approximately half the cost of a house of similar size made of brick and plaster.

The steel, in plate or sheet form, is used in some cases for the exterior of houses; in other cases for interiors or lining. In one type, a wooden framework is constructed in sections. To this are fixed metal sheets that will form the outer walls of the house.

Inside the framework, interior walls of various kinds of composition are placed, leaving an air space between the outer and inner walls.

Other builders are using steel framework instead of timbers. The parts of this are marked plainly and fit together readily. It is said, enabling four men to erect the framework of a house a day.

The outer walls of this type of house are made of slabs of synthetic stone that lock into place, hiding the steel framework completely. In the interior, the steel is covered with a lining of composition sheets, giving the appearance of ordinary walls.

Wasted Energy

Windsor, N.S., April 10.—(By Canadian Press).—Entering his grocery store on O'Brien street recently, Walter Card went to his safe to see if the receipts of the previous day's trade were intact. When he started to open the safe door he was surprised to have it crash to the floor at his feet. Considerably alarmed for the safety of his cash he examined the contents of the safe and found everything as he had left it.

The hinges had been cut through until they were barely strong enough to support the door, which needed only his touch to dislodge it. Evidently the would-be burglars had been alarmed just as they were about to reap the reward for their ill-advised labor which must have kept them busy throughout the dark hours of the morning.

Just Folks.

By EDGAR GUEST.

HOW MANY HURT?

"Suppose," said I, "you chanced to see a small boy tumble from a tree. How would you tell that tale to me?"

"Well dad," said he, "I'd simply say I saw a boy get hurt to-day. And two men carried him away."

"How many injured would there be?" I asked. "Just one, of course," said he. "The boy who tumbled from the tree."

No, no," I answered him, "that fall which hurt the lad, brought pain to all who knew and loved that youngster small."

"His mother wept, his father sighed, His brothers and his sisters cried, And all his friends were hurt inside."

"Remember this your whole life: Whatever hurts may come to you Must hurt us all who love you, too."

"You cannot live your life alone, You suffer with your slightest groan, And make your pain or grief our own."

"If you should do one shameful thing, You could not bear alone the sting, We'd spend our years in suffering."

"How many hurt, we cannot state, There never falls a blow of fate, But countless people feel its weight."

They stand by you forever, stand by them on St. George's night—the animals.—apr21/25
