Amnesty Postponed.

Amnesty for men arrested or accused by crown forces in Ireland has been insisted upon by intermediaries who have been at work trying to bring about an understanding between the government and the Sinn Fein. Mr. Lloyd George, however, holds that amnesty must await restoration of peace, and it is the impression that until such time there will be no interference with the men who are attempting to bring into court Sinn Feiners responsible for outrages.

Comment in this morning's newspapers relative to the government's Irish policy was, for the most part, restrained. The feature of the premier's speech that did not escape notice was the fact he was, in effect, holding an olive branch in one hand and the sword in the other. It evoked some questioning, but generally speaking was not regarded as banishing hope of success.

regarded as banishing hope of success.

"Few will question the wisdom and propriety of the new policy," said the London Times. "If the government shows a true and settled purpose to encourage the forces making for honorable settlement. Martial law under responsible control is preferable to the orable settlement. Martial law under responsible control is preferable to the existing system of indiscriminate and lawless reprisals."

While remarking on the "extraordinary and contradictory dualism of the premier's pronouncement," the Daily News agreed that conditions in districts affected by martial law should be better, and not worse than at present provided there is proper administration of the military regime. The newspaper expressed pleasure at the premier's readiness to confer with Sinn Feiners but adds: "Everything here depends on the number of Sinn Feinmembers of parliament who are accused of murder by the government, and who are therefore excluded from conference." If the names included in list of accused men are few the proposal is not unreasonable, but if any considerable portion of the Irish republican parliament is included, then the offer is little more than a trick."

Resolution To Secure All Possible Data On Best Methods of Adjusting Presesnt Difficulties Adopted by County Council At Today's Session.

In order that an amicable settlement, ferred to in clause three of the fo collegiate institute, the following reso-lution was brought in by the education-al committee and adopted unanimously by the county council during this morning's session:

"That we recommend that no action be taken respecting the request of the board of education of the city of London for assistance with their collegiate institute buildings.
"That a committee of the ccuncil be visable that they be given authority to interview the educational department with a view to having the regulations so amended as to include permanent imamended as to include permanent improvements or in some other way to more evenly adjust high and continuation school expenditures."

To make the resolutions effective and to carry out the aims and purposes of the council, the following committee was appointed: Chairman, Reeve J. E. Harrison, Parkhill; Deputy Reeve J. S. Cousins, Belmont, and County Clerk John Stuart.

The county council showed an evident desire to reach a reasonable and fair solution of the difficulties between the city and county. It was felt by the educational committee that a better understanding was needed between city and county, and to this end under the guid-ance of Chairman Reeve Harrison the
