Public Amusements

At the Royal Alexandra.

Miss Maude Fealy will make her first appearance in Toronto as a star at the Royal Alexandra on Monday evening, in a notable revival of Hall Caine's great play, "The Christian."

The role of Glory Quayle is the same in which Miss Fealy made her appearance a few seasons ago, when the piece was revived by an all-star cast, including many of the original company. The play itself is unquestionably Mr. Caine's greatest work and affords Miss Fealy wonderful opportunity for the display of her versatility.

goers were enraptured by Mr. Willard's appearance here. It is doubtful whether the audiences nightly tendered their approval entirely to the star, for the girlish young leading woman was unquestionably as much in demand. Prior to her appearance with Mr. Willard, Miss Fealy had been seen here as leading woman with the late Sir Henry Irving; appearing in the opposite roles to the great tragedian in all of the plays presented in his reperfoire for two seasons.

The story which Mr. Caine used as the basis of "The Christian" is in itself a most unique and original one. At the opening of the play, a delightful prolog briefly sets forth the groundwork of the drama. Here in a quaint old village, on the Isle of Man, Glory is pictured as the ideal of youthfulness. Her life has brought her nothing but sweet simplicity. She lives in the sunshine, free from worldly cars. She is taken to London, where great things are promised her, a career upon the stage is suggested, and the girl. ever-ambitious, enters into it all blindly, but she is a success and reaches the very highest pinnacle of fame in her profession. She has forgotten her friends, her family and her home. She is happy in her new life, with but one serious worry, that for the companion of her girlhood days, whose life has been given over to the monastery as a result of the broken love which had existed between them. Some years later, by accident, she finds him out during a visit to the underworld in London. John Storm, the companion to whom she had promised to remain faithful, has left the monastery and is in charge of the mission work in one of the lowest quarters in London. The old love returns. She begs him to come back to her. The scenes which follow are remarkable for their dramatic force, and at times the piece reaches almost impossible heights. The story follows along to an unexpected climax.

Miss Fealy is supported by James Durkin and a capable company of players. Thursday and Saturday matinees will be given.

Manager Shea has secured as his headline act next week at Shea's Theatre gensell. Lasky's latest and biggest achievement, "At the Country Club," which has proven one of his most successful ventures. It deals with society at its resort of summer outing, and the scenic splendor of the great suburban club house is almost past realization until one gazes on the scene convinced that it is but a triumph of dexterous stagecraft, instead of actual rer'ity. The musical numbers are unusually bright, among which the song "Hats," with many changes of startling novel specimens of headgear, is of exceptional brilliancy. Others of high merit are: "At the Waldorf" and "The Sympathetic Girl." This is one of the brightest offerings in latter day vaudeylle.
