GLASS JARS ARE BEST FOR CANNING

Department of Agriculture Gives Advice to Housewives for Fall Preserving.

The approach of the fall canning and preserving season has induced the United States Department of Agriculture to issue pamphlets of information for the benefit of those preparing fruits and vegetables for winter use. Many hundreds of thousands of housewives know how to preserve food so that it will remain in excellent condition for a long time, but there are many who are not capable of testing containers so that blemishes in them may not cause the preserved food to spoil.

A study of the various receptacles for preserved food has convinced the experts of the department that for home use glass jars are more economical than tin, because they can be used repeatedly and, with care, will last for a long time. But the rubber rings must be new each season. It does not pay to use them a second time since the spoilage frequently resulting much more than offsets the cost of new rubbers.

"It must be remembered," say the experts, "that modern methods of canning constitute a much more severe test for endurance of rubbers than does the 'open-kettle' procedure, since the rubber now has to withstand moist heat for a number of hours in canning some garden products."

Stress is laid on the necessity of having the rubber rings of first rate quality. They may be tested, it is explained, "by inserting forefingers and stretching the ring. If the rubber cracks, or if it does not readily return to its former size and shape, it should not be used."

In case there should be difficulty in obtaining a good quality of rubber, certain tests are offered by which the rubber may be proved. A good rubber ring will be strong enough to stand the strain of seventeen pounds of a 6-inch piece should stretch the same distance without cracking or breaking. As to the sort of jars that should be used the department says:

"The original type of Mason jar seals with a screw cap usually made of zinc with the top lined with porcelain. This top sometimes becomes loosened and the cap is then difficult to clean and sterilize. Then, too, its edge may be bent in opening the jar, so that thereafter it fails to make close contact with the rubber ring. There are several improved types of the Mason jar, among which is one which has a glass top fitting down onto the rubber ring and a metal ring which screws down over the glass top holding it in place. This jar needs no new parts from year to year except the rubber ring and it is easily sealed and opened."

There is also a wire clamp glass-top jar with a glass disk cover which fits over the rubber ring and is held in place by a wire clamp. Another type of jar referred to is the automatic seal jars which have large mouths and are especially good for packing whole fruits of the larger variety and for those products which require only a short processing period. Concerning tin cans the experts say:

"They are advantageous because there is no danger of breakage, either during the process of canning or afterward, during storage and transportation. Then, too, the cans may be cooled with cold water immediately after processing, which cannot be done with glass jars. The larger opening makes it easier to pack most products in the cans than in jars."

It is explained that in use at present are two types of cans. One type is the cap and hole can, much like the old-fashioned wax sealed cans, but is sealed with solder. The second type is the ordinary sanitary or rim-sealed can which is said to be rapidly replacing all other types.

"In canning most products," says the department, "which are highly acid, and a few others, such as pumpkin and squash (which contain certain corrosive substances) it is necessary to use cans which have a lacquered or enameled lining. This inside coating prevents to some extent any action of the fruits or vegetables upon the tin."

RECENT DEATHS

Mrs. Charlotte Taber.

In a telegram to Mrs. J. H. Colwell, 173 Victoria street, news reached here of the death of her sister, Mrs. Charlotte Taber, which occurred at San Francisco on Thursday evening. In a letter to Mrs. Colwell, three months ago, Mrs. Taber mentioned that she was not feeling well, but was expecting to leave for her home in Oregon. Sickness, however, must have overtaken her and she passed away in San Francisco. Mrs. Taber is survived by six children, two daughters and four sons, all residing in California, also two sisters, Mrs. R. J. Johnson, Call-

This Is "Nemo" Week In Our Corset Department

Choose Your Corset First

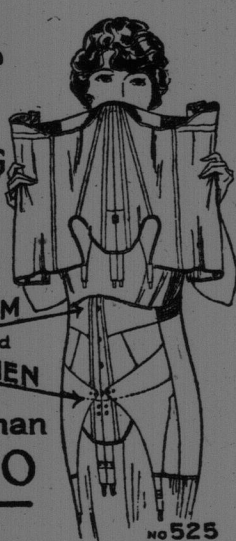

Before you select your fall wardrobe make sure of a perfect "corset foundation."

Stylish clothes cannot be properly fitted or look their best over a poorly fitting corset.

Your first step, then, should be the selection of a corset that not only is designed to meet the individual requirements of your figure, but is also stylish and well made to give extra long wear.

This is "Nemo" Week in our corset department. Our stocks of "Nemo" Corsets and Accessories have been carefully selected for this event. You will find among the many models and styles a Nemo corset that will suit you perfectly in every way.

Sound sleep has kept "Ty" Cobb in the great game for 19 years

"Ty" Cobb, veteran of the big leagues and still a great baseball player, says he has retained his speed and remarkable batting skill because he makes it a rule to sleep ten hours every night. So, too, the champions in all pursuits of life realize that a wide-awake mind and rested body are essential to conspicuous success.

They recognize that sound sleep and faultless bedding play important parts in their careers. Knowing this, why not take ten minutes tonight to study the spring and mattress you now use?
