CONSTIPATION Can Be Cured. You cannot expect to be well if you allow your bowels to become clogged. That is necessary to have a free motion of them every day, and to keep them in this condition all the time if you wish to be strong and healthy. If you don't keep them open the system will become clogged up with poisonous matter, producing constipation, headache, dizziness, bad blood, etc.

Keep the bowels in good condition by using Burdock Blood Bitters; the remedy that has built up an unrivalled reputation, during the past thirty-six years, as a cure for all troubles arising from a congested condition of the bowels.

Mr. Thomas Calder, East Lower Fort Gerry, writes: "I am writing you to let you know what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. I suffered very much from constipation and nose of the medicine I took agreed with me. Now I am glad to say that there is nothing like B.B.B. Since taking it I have not been troubled."

Called to New Mills (Chatham World) At a special meeting of the Presbytery of Miramichi, held in Campbellton on Tuesday, Rev. J. H. Kirk reported that he had moderated in a call on Monday of last week at New Mills in favor of Rev. F. L. Lobbs, of Londonderry, N. S. The call was hearty, and the stipend promised is $1,000. The call was ordered to be forwarded to the Presbytery of Truro, N. S., of which Mr. Lobbs is a member. It is expected that the call will be accepted by Mr. Lobbs, and provisional arrangements were made for his induction. For the last few years New Mills has been the banner congregation of the presbytery as far as giving to the schemes of the church are concerned.

One of the most useful things to have in a house is a bottle of lime water, which can be bought at any chemist. It has many useful properties. A teaspoonful put into a cup of water or milk kills any undesirable germs. A teaspoonful in a cup of milk is very good for delicate children with weak digestion, and it gives no unpleasant flavor. It is also good for people troubled with acidity of the stomach.

THE LAST WOODEN CHURCH IN ENGLAND

Greensted, in Sussex, is 900 Years Old

Its Interesting Story—Anniversary is to Be Celebrated By Special Service on St. Alban's Day

(London Daily News.) In many of the northern countries of Europe, as well as in England, there is abundant evidence of the use of wood in the Middle Ages for the construction of sacred buildings. "There was a time," says the Venerable Bede, "when there was not a stone church in all the land, but the custom was to build them all of wood."

The earliest cathedral at York and the Church of Lindisfarne, in Holy Island, were built of wood. The best account of these early wooden churches is to be found in Professor Dietrich's book on the Norse Stavekirke. In Norway some twenty-four out of 1,000 or more of the original stavekirke churches in England there remains only one such wooden church, the nave of which is a genuine example of Saxon architecture.

The little Church of Greensted lies a mile west of Chatham, in a beautiful spot, in Essex the subject of this paper. The church is a simple rectangular building, and is almost screened from the observation of the traveler approaching from the east by tall trees. It is in all probability due to its exceptionally sequestered position, as well as to its small size and insignificant endowments, that it has escaped unharmed during 900 years of our eventful and tumultuous history.

The Martyred King. The accredited tradition connects the foundation of the church with the history of St. Edmund, the martyred King of East Angles, who was murdered by the Danes in 870 A. D., in the 20th year of his age. The life and death of this King formed the theme for the songs of many Early English chroniclers. When the saint's body was brought from London to Edinburgbury in 1013, a temporary resting-place was afforded the remains at Greensted, where the monks hastily erected a wooden chapel to give them shelter. So it is recorded in two MSS. "Vita of Pasco Sancti Edmundi," in the Lambeth Library, and in another MS. cited in Robert Gordon's "Registrum Casrobri Sancti Edmundi." The ancient road from London into Suffolk lay through Abbees, Stapleford, Greensted and Danmow, and this would be the route by which the body of the king was translated.

There is much, however, to suggest that the fabric is of still older date. If the building had been erected for the reason assigned, it surely would not have been dedicated to St. Edmund rather than to St. Andrew, who is the patron of the church. The method of construction is not that which was usual in the eleventh century, when churches of stone were common, because of the sacred use to which it had been put, rather than that it was hastily erected to give a night's shelter to the body of the saint.

The Resoration. In 1848 a thorough restoration of the church became necessary. The oak sills, which had been laid on the earth with some rough flint put under at intervals, had become so rotten as to let the upright timbers drop through. The greater part of the old oak timbers were preserved, but it was necessary to cut some five inches from the top ends owing to the ravages made by the wood borer. A course of bricks was placed beneath and on this the oak trunks still rest. For many centuries the rafters of the roof had been covered with plaster within and without, which had doubtless been instrumental in preserving them from the weather. This plaster was now removed. The trunks forming the wale number twenty-five on the north side, and twenty-one on the south. The total length of the nave is thirty feet, and the width fourteen feet. The roof was originally, no doubt, of simple thatch. To this primitive structure was added a canopy of later date.

That now existing which may date from the reign of Henry VII., probably replaced one of the Norman period, and relics of this earlier flint canopy may be seen underneath the present brick work. A tower and spire covered with shingles at the west end are an Elizabethan date.

To celebrate the 900th anniversary of the founding of this church, the rector and parishioners propose to hold a special commemorative service on St. Alban's Day, June 15, and to erect a lych gate as a fitting memorial of the historical event.

Hard and sound, though beaten by the storms of nearly a thousand years, the ancient trunks of Greensted church yet promise to endure a thousand more.

After using five boxes I was completely cured, and an very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."
