GET (RIGH) HERE St. John Harbor a Bonanza for Strangers. Thousands of Dollars Worth of Sardines Seined Here During Last Few Weeks. Reople of St. John are not, perhaps, aware of the fact, yet under their very eves, in their own town, strangers come in, without paying anything for the privilege, and take away from under worth that might be theirs. For the past two or three weeks fish-For the past two or three weeks han-ermen from down the bay; Grand Man-an, St. Andrews and other places, have sent their boats into St. John harbor to capture the small herring and then dispose of them at advantageous prices in that Maine home of sardines, Bast-bast in that Maine home of sardines, Bast-port. The young herring, or as the older inhermen and eitizens would call them "sprate," have made the harbor of St. John their home during the past menth. The fishermen along the shore route, keenly alive to that fact, like the Indian in ancient New Brunswick history, have followed on the trail of these members of the finny tribe. Their efforts have been rewarded as the schools have been logated here in St. John harbor and many successful haus or catches made. The labor is all done at night. Then or catches made. The ishor is all done at night.
