SIR WM. MACDONALD TO MEET HIS BROTHER AFTER SIXTY YEARS

Founder of New Brunswick's Consolidated Schools in Interesting Romance

Sir Wm. C. MacDonald, the founder of New Brunswick's Consolidated Schools, and millionaire tobaccoist, is about to meet his long-lost brother "Jim," whom he has not seen since they were youths together in P. E. Island. While the former has piled up wealth in the manufacture of tobacco in Montreal, the other has been a rolling stone, finally becoming a bill collector in Portland (Ore.), his office, a street telegraph pole, his home a soapbox.

Separated from his brother for nearly sixty years Sir William will find him located in a secure office on the Willamette River, says a New-York Herald despatch from Portland (Ore.)

Wentham piled up will be the burden of the story of the boy who stayed near home. He as a ship builder, gold hunter, Indian fighter and now, with eighty-one years bowing his massive frame, a collector of bad bills, is the story of the other. James MacDonald is a familiar sight in Portland streets. His office is a bit of sidewalk at a telegraph pole in front of a grocery store in a prominent business street. Attired in battered plug hat and heavy ulster he stands in his "office" when weary of fruitless endeavor as collector, or waiting for fresh business. He is one of the best known figures in the city, and one cordially disliked by slow paying debtors for as long as there is a chance to get the money old "Jim" cannot be driven off by any device yet tried by his quarry.

"Jim" is getting old. Up to thirty years ago he carried on desultory correspondence with his brother. Then the correspondence stopped. After many years he wrote again a few months ago in an effort to locate his brother.

Brother Located.

Then came a despatch to a Portland paper saying that "Jim" McDonald's letter of enquiry had reached Mrs. Dougald MacCallum, of Winslow (P. E. I.) and then Sir Wm. MacDonald was notified and was overjoyed to learn that his brother is still alive.

In "Jim" MacDonald's letter he wrote that he has accumulated considerable wealth, but as his life is drawing to a close he desires to locate those who are related to him by blood. He mentioned his claim against the state of Oregon for $10,000, a right to which he acquired half a century ago, when serving in the Indian wars.

Jim McDonald's Tale.

With many digressions, Jim McDonald told the story of his life: "Fifty-nine years ago I left my home in the village of Acadia, Prince Edward Island, and went to the state of Maine, where 200 of us went to work building a ship, the California Packet, one share, at Machiasport. We had provisions for 200 for two years, and when we got the ship done, that was in '49, we sailed to Boston, and we stayed there six weeks, and then we went on to San Francisco by the Horn. We got there in '50, and we were $10,000 in debt for building the ship. We each agreed to pay part of the debt. But things were dull in San Francisco. I had expected to make a fortune in a few weeks, but I had to go to work in the streets, and I found that they were not paved with gold."

"After six weeks I came to Oregon and bought a mule, Billy, and began carrying freight. In five years I had a pack train of twenty mules, but they were all captured by the Indians in the war of '56. Afterward I began stock raising and made a fortune, but I lost it again."

"How long since you came to Portland?"

"Seventeen years. The first thing I found out was that there were two men here who had owed me for horses I had sold them thirty years before. They were two of the worst rascals that God ever gave breath to. I'm a bill collector. Yes, I have been collecting around here for a long time, and when people ask me where my office is I tell them it is on a telegraph pole and my headquarters are at Burns' grocery store. Burns is the first man I ever collected for."

His Blue-eyed Girl.

The old man assumed a fatherly air. "Young man," he said, "get married before you are twenty-five years old. People will steal enough from a single man to support two good ormen. Fifty-nine years ago I left a little blue eyed girl back in Prince Edward Island. I hoped to make a fortune and go back and marry her, but while I was here on the Pacific coast she died. I made the fortune afterward, then lost it, most of it to thieves, who stole it from me, so I want to say before I go to join that little lassie that all young men should get married before they are a quarter of a century old."

When the old man told these things he was in front of the grocery store in his "office," sitting on an apple box. The weather was snappy and he had his big ulster buttoned up to the neck. His old plug hat was on the back of his head, as usual. He spoke freely and his face broke into long forgotten smiles when he recalled his youth. He had made the great roundabout journey of life and had wandered back to the place where he had begun.

As to his brother and his approaching visit he was staid. He learned without emotion that his brother was a millionaire. He did not seem in the least concerned that this fashionable relative should find him sitting on an apple box or in the scow boat in which he lives. MacDonald's method of collecting bills is simple. He goes to the house where the bad debtor lives and asks for the money. If he is refused he sits down on the steps in full view of the street and waits. Everybody knows him and no greater disgrace could attend a man than to have the old collector sitting on his doorstep. He is soon smoked out and the bill is paid.

Toronto, Jan. 29.—(Special)—In the new parliament of Ontario the farming community has the largest representation, there being twenty-one titlers of 145,000 in the house. Lawyers follow with eight; ten; fourteen are merchants, 13 practicing physicians, eight journalists, six manufacturers, five contractors, four agents, two undertakers, two school inspectors, two cattle dealers, one auctioneer, and one principal of a correspondence school.

AMHERST.

Amherst, N. S., Jan. 29.—(Special)—A serious accident at the I. C. R. station this morning was averted by the prompt action of the driver of Niekema's special west-bound.

A man under the influence of liquor had walked on the track and lay down. The train stopped for water directly opposite, and he crawled across the track between the driving wheels. Fortunately just as the driver had pulled the throttle he observed the man under the wheels and thinking that he had been run over he immediately notified the conductor.

It was soon found that he was all right and immediately upon being removed from his perilous position he cursed his rescuers. The ingrate's name cannot be learned.
