

The Disenchanted Forest

Jake Griffin

Fly on the Wall

Three guys are walking up the stairs towards the third floor of Rutherford North, at the same time three girls are walking down. The girls had taken the elevator down so they do not pass the guys on the stairs.

The guy last on the stairs spots the girls first. His head swivels on his neck as if it was pulled by rope. Then he smiles a little and taps one of his buddies on the leg. His buddy stops walking up the stairs and looks down at him. He is pointing to the girls. Then his buddy looks up and smiles, pokes his lips, and slaps the third friend on the foot.

The third friend was in a hurry to get up the stairs so he is a little mad at being:

slapped. Then he sees the girls. Now he too is standing and staring.

The girls, meanwhile, were walking and talking out the library until one of them spotted the three guys. The one who saw them sort of smiled and nudged one of the others, who turned and saw the guys on the stairs. The third girl was looking for something in her book bag, so she was unaware of what was going on. She bumped into her two friends, who were giggling and peeking and talking and walking, slowly, towards the turnstiles. They both poked her and told her to look over to the stairs. She turned and looked, and just sort of shrugged and went back to her book bag. The guys saw her shrug and began to laugh. My, they mask dejection well.
