T LANT 1.1.1.1.1.1.1.1.1

THE LITERARY TRANSCRIPT,

AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCER.

Vot. 1. No. 371

QUEBEC, SATURDAY, 19TH MAY, 1838.

PRICE ONE PENNY

POETRY.

[For the Literary Transcript.] THE GLOAMING HOUR.

There's glory when the blaze of day, Shines brightly thro' the sky. And gorgeous clouds in white array, Go swiftly floating by ;

There's splendour where the pale monlight Streams o'er the winter scene ; And gilds the sheated landscape bright, With silver smile screue ;

There's beauty in the haloed star, That comes in mechanish su To shed its trembling rays star Across the charmed earth;

But Ob, give me the gloaming ho When, damp with gathering dew, he grass the leaf, the folding flows All blend in dusky bue : The

The calming twilight hour of rest, When thoughts of vanished years Come thickly crowding in the breast, To fill the eye with tears.

To flood the eye with precious team For griefs and pleasures fiel ; To summon up from by-gour years The distant and the dead ;

To wander o'er the parting main That rolls on Scotias' share, And be with those dear friends egain, We no'er shall gate on more;

To roam along the ocean strand, And mark the billon', swelt Roll onward, to embrace the land We loved, and love so well ;

To stray along the sacred plain Where rest the holy brase, With those we pine to see in rain, The tenants of the grave ;

Go, choose the bright and gandy day, Or e'en the silent eve, When moon and star with silver my Their robe of radiance weave;

The sweetest hour of all that Fall O'er beings troubled sea, Hour, when the heart has reached her goal, When memory's magic wraps the seal, The gloaning hour for me ! A. G. I.

WEALTH AND FASHION.

[CONCLUDED.]

"Yon are distracted," said her sister, "what does all this mean "?" "Look ?" she extained, sprain with her while sain shee the case that lay on the carpet. Fanny pick-edit up; it contained a pair of pear lear-rings and a pin, neither remarkable for their rich-ness or beauty. "They are very pretty," said Fanny, " shall I put them into your east ?" Another hurst of tears followed. "You will render yourself unit to be seen; and what will Mr. Barrell think !" "I care not what he think." Violent passion soon relieves itself. Caroline began to reflect upon his house, his equipage, his fashon and wealth, and grew calmer; but with a tast for which her was remarkable, she determined to wear to contenance, and again arranging her orange blossoms, she descended to the dmiring tride-groom. "It is all in vain," said she, "to try; I cannot wear the ear-rings; I must have my cars prepared for them." Her flush-ed checks and swollen eyes here testimony to the pain she had suffered in trying to force hem through her cars. Her lover assured her she wanted no ornament in his eyes, and that he had never fancied ear-rings. "There is a style of dress, however," said Caroline, " that is consistent with ones rank in life. "You are distracted," said her sister, what does all this mean ?" " Look !" she that he had never fancied ear-tings. "There is a style of dress, however," said Caroline, "that is consistent with ones rank in life. I hope I shall always dress in such a manner as to do you honour." "Sweet creature !" ex-claimed the brid-groom, kissing her hand. Caroline turned away with disgust, and sud misgivings came over her. In one hour the caremony had passed, and bridal visitors be-gan to throng. Perhaps among them all there was not one less happy than the beautiful bride; the two great objects for which she had as yet been toiling were still unaccom-plished, pin money and diamonds. The next morning at ten, the equipage was at the door; the bride took leave of her fami-by, and was handed into her carriage by the bridegroom; the coach with its four bays and outrider, disupmeared, like Cinderella's coniont-rider, disappeared, like Cinderella's equi-page, and all at Mr Warner's returned to its usual state of domestic quiet.

usual state of domestic quiet. It is said by some sensible person, that we become more acquainted with people in three days travel, than a years stationary residence. The first day, the new married couple were very conversible. The bridegroom described his house and furn'ture, toll how much he gave for every article, and they rolled smooth-by on. The second day, conversation flagged give for every article, and they toiled smooth-ly on. The second day, conversion flagged a little. Caroline began to complain of being "shut up," sold how todions it was to jour-ney, and at last proposed letting down the green shades, which had been closed at the express desire of the gentleman, who was natch troubled with an inflammation in the tatich troubled with an inflammation in the eyes. " Certainty my love, if you desire it," said he, but without making any movement to assist her efforts. After some time she ac-complished her purpose, let down the shade of the window, and, nations her addition to be and of the window, and The second side of the prime is the shade and the window, and, putting her head out dieltared "it vas deligitatis to breather the fresh site." "On on the window, my love." said Mr. Burrell, gently drawing her towards thin, as i pulling it up. "I cannot permit you to endanger your precious health; the air is very odd; you don't consider it is the third of November," and he wrapped his wadded all contained and the least afraid of taking cold," said she; "I must have it down. I shall die to ride so shut up." "I obe homest," replied the, "I you are not afraid, I am." (D, that is quite another afting, as it. Caroline, it is sprese I have a othing to do but obe,"." It seemed as if the bridgerom thought the game, for in a few moments he said, "I this

It seemed as if the bridegroom thought the same, for in a few moments he said, "this light is insupportable," and he drew up the shade. "Good gracious ?" exclaimed the bride, "and to ride all day to-day shut up as I was yesterlay ?" "Perhaps you will take a little nap my love; I always sleep a great deal when I ride." "I am not so for-funate," returned she. "Every thing de-pends upon the carriage in which you travel. I had it built on purpose for my comfort." "So it seems," replied Caroline. "I it fusibled in the most thorough manner : it cost hearty five hundred more ; there is not per-haps a hundsomer team in New York. You travelled in a very different style from this travelled in a very different style from this travelies in a very different style from this when you went on and returned last fall and this spring." "Very different," said Caro-line, and she thought of the gay and animated party in the stare-coach, and the pleasant variety on board the stare boat, and notwith-reading the study is might decome utilize standing the style in which she was travelling heartily wished she could exchange the heartily heartily wished she could exchange the mole. "Pray try to get a little nap, my love ; nothing shoitens the way like sleep," and the bridegrow at drew faom the pockets of the car-riage a tavelling cap, took off his hat, and gatten his cap, and leant back. In a very short time he gave evident signs of being asheep. Nothing could have been less inter-esting to a young bride than her present con-templations. There is a relaxation in the muscles in sleep, by no means favourable to age; the falling under lip, the strongly mar-ed lines of the countenance, the drooping corners of the mouth, the imminent risk of losing his bulance, first on one side, than on the other; the danger too that Caroline's French had incurred by his sudden inclinations towards her; all this was not calculated to improve the already nuffled temper of the young lady. " And I an to nase my life with this be.

towards her; all this was not calculate w improve the already ruffled temper of the young lady. "And I am to pass my life with this be-ing," thought she. "Were Benson in his place, how animated, how pleasant, would be his conversation ! after all there is nothing like mind ; nothing at least, but wealth and fashion. Thank heaven ! I have secured was one of triumph : all the beauty and fash-ion of the City were congregated. Caroline saw her diamonds reflected from mirrors on all sides, but still the thought obtruded, " they are not mine." Invitations poured in : she was the evening and morning star of fashion. At length she wrote to Horace, " I have ac-complished my object ; all the rank that one can obtain in this country. I possess ; I hold in my hand the 'eystone of the arch—Wealth and Fashion." Chroline, however, had too much intellect to be long blind to the degree of estimation in which she was held. She soon perceived that her hushand was laughted at, and that she was pitied rather than envied. soon perceived that her husband was laughed at, and that she was pilied rather than envied. It was true she had all the outward signs of homage, but every thing about her was mock-ery. There is no tyranny like that of the weak. Burrell regarded her only as an ap-pendage to himself she found him selfshy, ostentatious, and mean. In vais she strove to obtain the utimatum of her desires, pin money. Like herself, he considered wealth power, and not a particle would he trust out of his hends; this was a source of constant altereation. altercation.

altercation. After the novelty of showing a handsome wile was over, Barrell began to feel the want of his bachelor habits; he liked whist clubs, and supper parties better than soirces and pic-nics. The privation of his company was no annoyance to his wife; but when he no long-er entered into her mode of visiting, or her annasments, he thought them unnecessary, and compliance of on unch useless argence. and complained of so much useress expenses Every thing, in his view, was useless, except what contributed to his pleasure. Caroline had gone on accumulating debts, without looking forward to any payment. Those inand complained of so much useless expens looking forward to any payment. Those is curred before her marriage were still unsettle curred before her maringe were shap to surply the same tradespeople were happy to surply her to any amount ; and as a request for mo-ney always produced a scene, she acquired the constant habit of running up bills. Where now were her brilliant prospects ? She was either alone, or in a crowded circle, or what was still worse, alone with Burrell.

Among ail the circle of fashion, she possessed not one real friend. Mrs. Ellison was as heartless as Caroline, without her talents. Often her thoughts reverted to her own home, the above of her childhood, and she felt that in the depths and fullness of domestic love, in the depths and fullness of domestic love, there was even more power than wealth can bestow. In one of those fits of musing which occur to every rational mind, a letter was brought to Caroline; she opened it, and found it was from Horace, informing her "that the favourite wish of his heart was now accom-plished; Benson was, after all that had pas-ed, to become his brother, and that the day was appointed for the marringe to take place between him and Fanny.

was appointed for the marringe to take place between him and Fanny. "My predictions with regard to him," he added, "are fast fulfilling; he is a staining eninence in his profession. I am commission-ed by my parents, as well as the parties, to re-quest that you and MF Eurrell will come on to the nuptials. They are to be private, and without show; but it is pleasant for families to congregate on these occasions. You need have no ammethesion about Enson. It wires to congregate on iness occasions. You need have no appreheesion about Benson; 'he views your former engagement with him much in the same light as you do, one most happily set aside." With what anguish was this let-ter nermed!

set aside." With what anguish was this lei-ter permed ! There was still, however, a pleasure in the idea of going in style to the humble nuptishs of her sister. When Mr Burrell entered, she informed him of the invitation. "Go and welcome," said he, "Suit don't ask me." "Shall I travel with two horses or four ?" "Oh, four by all means i the stage coach is the best way of travelling." "You surely do these, and these will command every thing. For mean to let your wife go in the public I wish this may be the last journey we shall stage ?? "Why not ?-it is the way in take together." Let us pass over the remainder of this odi-ous journey, and behold Caroline in her new abole. became acquainted." "Ar Burrell, it would be disgraceful to you to suffer me to travel in that manner." "Then stay at home; the carriage and horses, I suppose you will allow are mine ; I had the carriage built for my own convenience; I am going a journey next month, and shall want it. It is much better for you to go in the styl, of your family." "This is infollerable," sai! Caroinne, with e vehemence that sometimes overcame her usu-al tact; "to be the wife of a man that is worth millions, and derive no advantage from his weakb." "I is no advantage, madam, to live in a house like this, to visit in the first circles, and to wear diamonds when you to live in a house like this, to visit in the first circles, and to wear diamonds when you please?" "None," said she, the truth forc-ing its way, " compared to what I relinquish-ed." "And pray madam, what di' you re-linquish ?" " What you, had you lavished upon me all the wealth, to which, as your wrife, I am entitled, could never have procur-ed me-self approbation ?" We sometimes from habit, or want of thought, rely too much upon the obtuseness of thought, rely too much upon the obtuseness of united state we estimate lowly. This was the case with Caroline. She in several instances unfered her discust or indirantion to vent itminis that we estimate lowly. This was into case with Caroline. She in several instances suffered her disgust or indignation to vent it-self in words, of which she did not realise the strength. The undiscip..acd prepare scorpion whips for themselves. Her ill disguised con-tempt and aversion first broke down the com-mon barriers of forbearance; and when her husband became convinced that she had no affection for him, he heartily repaid her aver-sion. Sceense of accusation and retor follow-ed. Burrell assured her she had full permis-sion to return to her hoasted home, and remain as long as she pleased. Carcline replied that it was the first wish of her heart; but, as his wife, she was entitled to a uitable mainte-nance. It would be painful and useless to detail the low altercations that followed, be-fore a paltry pittance was granted. It may easily be imagined in what manner they part-ed, and with what sensations she returned to tore a pality pittance was granted. It may easily be imagined in what manner they part-ed, and with what sensations she returned to her early home. In one sense she had ac-complished all for which she had panted-wealth, fashion, and diamonds; and her pre-sent allowance she was at liberity to dignify by the name of pin money. The morning hefore her departure, she gave creders to a servant to desire her creditors to send in their bills to Mr Burrell the ensuing week. His rage may easily be imagined, when they poured in upon him; but after consulting gen-tlemen of the law, he concluded to pay them. Caroline arrived in season to witness the muptials of her sister. What a contrast to her own ! For the first time, she fell, that if there is a paradise on earth, it is found by mutual affection. How could she help com-paring Benson, in all the grace of youthful intellect and many beauty, to Burrel! ! The thought was agony, avd, unable to command her itears, she fiew to her chambar. Horace followed her, and begged for admission. "My dear brother," said she, "I return to you an altered creature. I detest the very sound of wealth and fashion, and I perfectly despise my own folly in supposing there could be hap-piness in either. I only wish now to forget it toe." "No, Caroline, I cannot forget it, nor do I wish you to forget they become eventual's sources of improvement. Do not stive to banish wholesome reflection, but convert it to its best purposes, moral discipline. "I am sure," aid Caroline, "I have had enough of disciplines ince I married, and den't see that I am at alt the beiter for it." " There is no magical power in discipline that compels us to improve," said Horace ; " and this our own fault if we, "a de horace"

don't see that I am at all the better for it." " There is no magical power in discipline that compels us to improve," said Horace ; " but it is our own fault if we do not accept improvement from lessons of suffering and disappointment." " I have learnt nothing by it," again expected Caroline. " I think you have ; you have learnt that wealth and fa-shion can, in themselves alone, confer mo happines; and that the only nobility worth possessing, is derived from talent and virtue."