a blue ribbon round his neck; but otherwise he was an ordinary dog. It wasn't long before he noticed that the front gate was open, and, after a guilty look round, he ambled slowly out of the gate, and proceeded up the street on a tour of inspection. He had the usual dog's enthusiasm about smells. He spent his small life smelling everything that came in his way. It was his instinct to rest this small black-nose for a second or two on an object, and classify it by its odor. Smelling served him place of writing or speech, and, to a certain extent, took the place of reason. So to speak, Various routine smells and a chance meeting with a poodle friend took up his attention for the next two blocks, but, at the beginning of the third, he discovered smells of unusual brilliance, and followed them up until he found, encamped upon an unbuild-upon plot of land, a travelling circus. Fido overhauled the whole show, and added about 300 new smells to his collection. He finished up with the dust-bins—there were five of them—and passed out, wagging the short, hairy thing at the conclusion of him. As soon as he slunk in at the front gate, a pretty girl with golden hair he smelt his way through life, and, as he cried, "Oh-h! Fido, darling!" caught he was a painstaking dog, and one who made full use of his opportunities, he had smelt pretty well the whole suburb.

The first thing he found when he got out was a dead rat, and, as it was an extremely dead rat, it was an exceptionally interesting subject. Fido ran his nose carefully over it, so as to get the full flavor, and then he

The next item of interest was a very dead cat. It was up a tree, but its flavor called out to Fido. The cat had been hung out in the sun for some days, and Fido had been reminding burial. Fido investigated it, and then he had a drink out of the gutter.
