EXHIBITION AT THE COLLEGIATE

Exceedingly Clever Work by the Industrial Classes Shown Friday.

Arts and Crafts in all their various branches form a splendid exhibition in the Collegiate Institute, and it is an exposition of the latest talent of many pupils brought out by the un- tiring efforts of their teachers, who appear to have spared no pains to produce the best. The old adage, "if a thing is worth doing, it is worth doing well" is here exemplified. The work is that of scholars who have gone through from one to three courses in the industrial and art training classes which are a tribute to their aptness for tuition, and ability, many of the exhibits being quite worthy of professional hands.

The exhibition which is in the As- sembly Hall is in three sections, Household Science, Art, and pen- cil and crayon, and in construction and structural design. Each section is an example of intelligent industry and each appeals to its own particu- lar enthusiasts.

Perhaps the most striking is the woodwork and upholstering of the cabinet making department. This work is carried on in connection with the allied trades and professions and gives an engineer student a practical course of construction. Some of the lounge chairs shown are beautifully finished and strongly made, the best example being that of Claude White, Russell Miller, Arthur Wilson, Frank Splatt and Frank Alway, follow him closely, while Nelson Knill, table; J. Johnson, duet stool and Lorne Ab- by, bookcase, exhibit superb work- manship. From elementary geomet- ry to advanced draughtsmanship, the mechanical drawings are excellent and Geoffrey Whittaker's sectional drawing of a Ross Rifle stands un- approached. Claude White, Russell Miller, Geo. Bonny and Fred Alway, submit clever plan work. Metal work done in the winter is also included, and E. Weir is good in this depart- ment. Mr. James Smith conducts the classes dealing with the above work.

Of more interest to the ladies is, perhaps, the Household Science, which section is controlled by Miss Edna Hartley. This includes needle- work of all descriptions and the in- tricacies of the kitchen art of cook- ery. Many exquisite examples of this appetizing branch of industrious labour are on view and were made during classwork. The embroidery, kimono and underwear made by the girls of the Nova Scotia Anglican Syn- od with the needle and scissors, Miss Mary Yule, Flossie Mitchener, Ada M. Lightfoot, Daisy Westbrook, Myrtle Misner and Glays Robb, are experts of the delicate and pleasing work. Violet Smith, Annabell Ryer- son, Marjory Gibson, Vera Graham, Dorothy Smith, Olive Pettit, Karis- leen Biggar and Helen McAdam, have reason to be proud of their finely made exhibits.

Last, but not least, the artists of the city, trained by Miss Hubner- Smith, occupy a justly prominent prominent position in the hall. Miss Smith's ideal is to impart to her pupils, as well as an artistic hand and eye, in order that a delicate taste in decoration might be developed and the result seen in the future homes of her pupils. The range of the work is widely diffused and includes, Mag- azine covers, book design, lettering, monograms, pen and ink wall paper design, perspective, still life, caste drawing, window sketch work, pas- tels and aiter colors. Each has its shining light, and generalising, Miss Terryberry, who delves into various sections of art work, has on exhibi- tion the best work of her pupils. Her cover and plate design are at once original and excellently executed. In illustration work Leone Chambers is good, while Messrs. Gladys Waltz, Mitchell and Florence Mitchener are distinctly clever in many branches.

Miss Standings window sketching, which consists of taking sketches from windows, is very effective, this is difficult work. Teresa Jackson and Gladys Waltz do pretty water colors, the technique of which is true. Edith Taylor excels in still life and Wray Carter displays talent in a cleverly finished magazine cover. Parents should not miss the opportunity, af- forded by this exhibition, of seeing the accomplishments of their child- ren. The instructors present give valuable advice with regard to the prospective future for the rising gen- eration in any given direction, and their views are worthy of considera- tion. The exhibition is open to-day from 2 p.m. until 9 p.m.

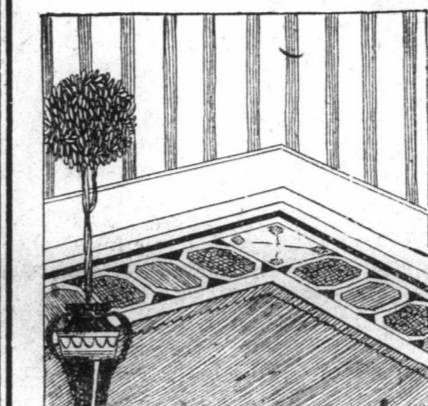

REDMOND DECLINED
LONDON, June 6.—John E. Red- mond, leader of the Irish National- ists, today declined a request by Irish women suffragettes that he re- ceive a deputation on the subject of the inclusion of women as electors for the Irish parliament. Mr. Red- mond pointed out that previous de- putations of this nature had caused only unpleasantness, and reiterated that Ireland under home rule must decide for herself whether she wants women voters.
