A CHILIAN HEROINE.

Bombs Were Thrown into the Room Where She Was

But She Promptly Threw Them out Again and Then Went to Arm and Warn her Father

During the recent rebellion in Chili there have been many instances of heroism displayed, and one in particular is described in "Dark Days of Chili." It was told to the author by the father of the heroine.

"One evening at 6 o'clock, during my absence my daughter was writing some letters for me at a table. Suddenly she heard a crash of broken glass, followed by a loud explosion at the end of the room, and there had been so much bomb work of late that instinctively she guessed what had happened.

"But before she could collect herself sufficiently to rush to the door a second bomb was hurled in, and rolled almost to her feet, providently without exploding. This she picked up and threw from the window into the street below. Then seeing that some unknown person was snuffing in a half open box of rifle cartridges, she quickly dashed a large jug of water over it.

"By this time the servants had rushed in and succeeded in extinguishing the fire, which had caught the curtains and furniture.

"But my brave daughter, remembering that I had gone out unarmed, took my revolver and started out alone to meet me on my way home, and it was not until I had been provided with the weapon that she told me what had happened."

SECRET PROCESS.

Oxygen Produced From Air by Means of Copper Tubes

This Will Supply Limitless Quantities of Fuel at a Mere Nominal Cost.

New York, Feb. 21. — At a dinner given at the Players' club Saturday to Raoul Pictet, the Swiss scientist, oxygen was produced from air by a secret process used for the first time in this country. The demonstration was made in the presence of M. Bruwaert, the French consul-general, Edward Sumner, who represented Sir Thomas Lipton, and a lawyer connected with the general liquid air company.

For the experiment a simple apparatus, consisting mainly of copper tubes, was used. Atmospheric air was taken in at one end and at the other oxygen was blown by the production of a calcium light from the ignition of gas. Liquid air was employed in the process.

Mr. Pictet asserts that with a 500-horse power plant he can produce daily 500,000 cubic feet of oxygen, 1,000,000 cubic feet of nitrogen and 1,000 cubic feet of carbonic acid gas. The last named product is sold at a profit for the cost of the entire production and oxygen and nitrogen will represent net profits. As 2,000 cubic feet of oxygen is estimated to be equal to heating power of one ton of coal, the process is considered to be of great value from a commercial standpoint.

MILITARY CRITIC.

His Views of the Disasters to the British.

Says the Most Ordinary Precautions were Neglected in the way of Reconnoitering.

New York, Feb. 27. — Important reports in regard to the operations of the British army in South Africa have been received by the war department at Washington from Capt. L. H. Stocum, military attaché with the British forces.

Criticism which Capt. Stocum makes of the tactics and personnel of the British army have caused some comment before him. He was with Gen. Buller on the Tugela, and says that in his first battle there that officer attempted to cross by two drifts in plain view of the Boers with absolutely no preliminary attempt to reconnoiter, and that apparently Gen. Buller believed he had only a small force to encounter and would have no difficulty in brushing it aside.

Failure to make proper reconnaissance he gives as the cause of the disasters sustained by the British at Magersfontein and Stormberg. At Magersfontein Gen. Buller was caught at night with his brigade in quarter column, to capture a position. No attempt at flanking was made. The men moved forward four deep, stumbling over obstructions, when suddenly a searchlight was turned on them and they became the target for the Boer rifles and guns, which decimated their ranks.

Official information as to the operations of the British since the pursuit of Gen. Cronje has not been received by the war department, as Capt. Stocum uses only the mails, but officers of the service are satisfied the disasters which have overtaken the British have taught them a lesson, which they are applying at their present operations.

Capt. Stocum is probably with the troops which have surrounded Gen. Cronje, leaving Gen. Buller's operations to be reported upon by officers in whom he can place confidence.

Great regret is expressed by the department that the British declined to permit four officers to witness the South African operations as desired, for it would then be possible to dis-

AN AWFUL NUISANCE.

THE MAN WHO DEVELOPS INTO A CHRONIC BORROWER.

A Habit Which Brings the Impetuous Individual Who Cultivates It Dangerously Near the Dishonest Line—Don't Be a Beat.

It is old Polonius, in Shakespeare's tragedy of "Hamlet," who says: Neither a borrower nor a lender be, For loan oft loses both itself and friend, And borrowing dulls the edge of honesty.

This advice he gives to his son, young Laertes, on his departure for France. And it contains a world of wisdom in a little space.

The chronic borrower exists in every community, and he is a nuisance. How well we all know him under various forms! There is the man who invites you out to drink and then asks you for a $5 note, to be repaid the next Monday. That day never comes, and the lender is obliged to charge the sum to profit and loss.

Then there is the fellow who comes and borrows a small sum, which he repays very promptly, and you think you have seen the last of him. But you are mistaken. He reappears and asks for the loan of a larger amount, and if you are remiss enough to comply with his request you will never see your money again. Following these comes the chap who is a mere beggar. He wants a half dollar until tomorrow. But he never intends to return, and you never expect him to do this. You give him the coin to get rid of him for the time being, and he shuffles off to spend it at the nearest taproom.

Now, all these impetuous men were, no doubt, likely lads growing up until they fell into the habit of borrowing. They were probably honest enough in paying their debts at the start, but then came a time when, owing to some extravagant expenditure which they could not afford, they found themselves unable to meet their just debts.

They brazened it out then, and they have continued to brazen it out ever since. They have lost all sense of honor and all self respect and are the scum of the society of the day. Dilettantes, from which there is little hope of escape. They have no character or standing in the community in which they live, and they that know them best will dodge around the corner when they see them coming.

There is, of course, in trade a legitimate system of borrowing on good security. Business could not be conducted long under ordinary conditions unless some such practice prevailed, but this does not furnish any excuse for the shortcomings of those who obtain loans without any idea of how they are to be repaid.

"Borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry," as the old proverb in the play truly says. A borrower is necessarily a spendthrift. He never has a bank account because he never saves anything. He has nothing to draw upon but the savings of his acquaintances, on which he does not claim. He may not call himself a dishonest man, but he is not far from it. For instance, he strikes a good natured slob who does not know him very well and by fictitious statements secures a dollar or two out of a poor innocent who can ill afford to lose it and who, perhaps, needs it for the proper support of his household or for the payment of his weekly bills. That money is never returned, as the borrower well knows, but he does not care, for he has made good in a short time. The law may not be able to reach him, but some people would call him a thief. And the chronic borrower is far from happy.

He has no home, no station, no doubt, like Wilkins Micawber when the punch was brewed, but he has terrible hours of depression when he does not know where the next meal is coming from and when he has exhausted the patience of all his relatives and acquaintances. But he need not be in this pickle if he would resolve to live within his means and not indulge in luxuries which he well knows he cannot afford.

If a man's expenditures do not come within his income, there is bound to be disaster in the end. He will be bankrupt in both fortune and character if he does not wisely regulate his expenses so they may not exceed his salary or the receipts of any business in which he may be engaged.

It is a wise rule for a young man never to buy anything for which he has not the ready money to pay. There is too much temptation in getting into credit. It is a man's duty to obtain more than he really needs and thus run up large bills which he finds it difficult to meet.

Young fellows are too apt to jest about standing up the tailor or some other tradesman in it and went to bed. They keep an honest, hardworking man out of his money. Why is it not a better way to save by your earnings until you have the cash to settle a bill at once? In this way you will obtain a reputation that will be of inestimable value to you in any reputable pursuit you may follow. It is just as easy to be a white sheep as a black one and a deal more pleasant in the end.

If you live to be old, you do not want to look back over a wasted life and regret that you did not avoid these extravagances, which, after all, have brought you little or no enjoyment. Do without things rather than borrow.

If you do not practice self denial in youth, you will never attain any position or distinction worth having. Perhaps you do not know what a deadbeater is. Well, he's a liar and a cheat, and that is what the chronic borrower always is. Don't be a beat.—Boston Herald.

Why the Cook Gave Notice. "I see you printed something the other day about the disadvantages of impetuousness, you know," said the man with glasses yesterday. "Now, I'm afflicted that way myself. A few nights ago when I went home it was raining hard. My umbrella was wet, and I carried it immediately to the kitchen to drain. Casting about for something to stand it in, my eye caught some sort of receptacle on the floor near the stove, which I took to be the coal bucket, so I stood the umbrella in it and went to bed. The next morning the cook gave notice. She had found my umbrella standing in her shoe."—Syracuse Post Standard.

Much Better. Mrs. Snopser—I wonder if it is true, as Dr. Jacobs says, that the baby of today has a better chance of living than the baby of 50 years ago? Snopser—Certainly it is. The baby of 50 years ago is half a century old now.
