The Burglar's Blunder.

(By RICHARD MARSH.)

"That's done the trick! Now for the swag!"

As Mr. Bennet made this observation to himself, he slipped the window up and stepped into the room.

He stood for a moment, listening.
Within, all was still; without, not a sound disturbed the silence of the night.

"I think it's all serene."

It is probable that Mr. Bennet smiled. He was engaged in the exercise of his profession, and it consoled him to perceive that, on this occasion the stars seemed to be fighting on his side. He drew down the window softly and replaced the blind.

It was a principle of his never to leave anything which might give a hint to the outside public of what was going on within. The illumination the stars seemed to be fighting on his side. He drew down the

"Perhaps I know as much about diamonds as here and there a few."

Her tone was peculiar, almost suggestive. For an instant Mr. Bennet meditated making a clean breast of it and asking Miss Welch to come in on sharing terms. But he had an incurable objection to collaboration.

Besides, in this case sharing terms would probably mean that he would have to go through the form, at any rate, of making her his wife.

"Where does she keep them? In a safe, I hope."

He did not hope so, though he said he did. At the very best a safe, to the professional man, means the wasting of valuable time.

"She keeps them in her bedroom, in the chest of drawers, in a red leather box in the little top drawer on the left hand side."

Mr. Bennet felt a glow steal over him. He began to conceive quite a respect for Miss Cecilia Jones.

"And the gold—where does she keep that?"

"In tin boxes. There are ten of them. There are a thousand sovereigns in each. There are five boxes on each side of the chest of drawers."

Mr. Bennet possessed considerable presence of mind, but he almost lost it then. Ten thousand pounds in sovereigns! He would never regret the affection he had lavished on Miss Welch—never! He would never regret it. Would it be a bad speculation to marry her? But no; the thought was rash. He would reward her, but in quite a different way. He made a rapid calculation. Ten thousand sovereigns would weigh, roughly, about a hundred and thirty pounds avoirdupois.
He might turn them into a sack—fancy a sackful of money! But a hundred and thirty pounds was no light weight to carry far. He must have a vehicle at hand. What a convenience a pal would be! But he had worked single-handed so far and he would work single-handed to the end.

When he had ascertained his facts he acted on them as on any, thus revealing the artist again. Spare no pains in making sure that the crib is worth the cracking, then crack it at once.
On the night following in this conversation he had arranged for his marriage to take place on the next day but one—or Miss Welch thought he had—so that if he wished to avoid a scandal he really had no time to lose. Now we have seen him enter the house. Now we understand how it was he knew his ground.

He paused for an instant outside the drawing-room door; it was through the drawing-room window he had effected an entrance. All was still.

He moved up the staircase two steps at a time. There were no lights in the hall. At the top he paused again.
From information received, to adopt a phrase popular in an antagonistic profession, he was aware that Miss Jones slept in the front bedroom.

"There's three bed-rooms on the first floor. When you go to the top of the stairs you turn to the left, and if you go straight on you walk right into Miss Jones's room."

Mr. Bennet turned to the left. He went straight on. Outside Miss Jones's door he paused a moment.
He felt that all his properties were in order—a bottle and a sponge in his right-hand pocket, a revolver in his left, a stout canvas bag fastened round his body beneath his coat. The lantern was shut. He moved it.

He moved it. He moved it. He moved it.
