AGRICULTURE

THE CHARACTER OF THE SOIL

The character of the soil is a factor of great importance in the selection of crops and in the determination of the methods of cultivation. It is the foundation upon which the farmer builds his plans for the future. The soil is the source of the food which we eat, and it is the responsibility of the farmer to see that it is properly cared for and that it yields the maximum amount of food for the minimum amount of labor and expense.

The soil is composed of various elements, and its character is determined by the relative proportions of these elements. The most important elements are the nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium. These elements are essential for the growth of plants, and they are found in the soil in various forms. The farmer must know the character of his soil in order to know how to best use it.

The soil is also affected by the climate and the weather. The amount of rainfall, the temperature, and the amount of sunlight all have an effect on the soil. The farmer must take these factors into account when he is planning his crops and his methods of cultivation.

The soil is a living organism, and it must be treated as such. It must be kept healthy and productive, and it must be protected from the harmful effects of erosion and other soil-depleting practices. The farmer must use the best methods of soil conservation, and he must be willing to invest the time and money necessary to do so.

The soil is the foundation of our civilization, and it is the responsibility of the farmer to see that it is properly cared for and that it yields the maximum amount of food for the minimum amount of labor and expense. The farmer must know the character of his soil, and he must use the best methods of cultivation to make the most of it.
