

The Holy Souls.

There is a prison house of fire Where captive souls must stay Until the guilt of all their sins Is washed and burnt away. But we on earth may help them much, And surely we should try. For those poor souls will succor us When we shall come to die. Perhaps within that prison fire And our loved ones passed away, A father or a mother dear For whom we never pray. A sister or a brother, A kind and loving friend, Who wait so patiently each day For us, our aid to lend. There are many ways of helping them, Of which, there are a few, A little act of kindness For someone we may do. An alms, bestowed in secret, Forgiveness for a foe, And greater, far than all things else, The Mass will help them so. Each morning when we wake, We should offer for the day To Jesus, for the suffering souls, Each footstep on our way. Each thought, and word and action, Each pleasure and each pain, And Jesus will return it all A hundredfold again. Then let us strive to help them While on this earth we stay For sooner than we realize We too shall pass away. But if we now show mercy, And for them do our best, When we too suffer, we may hope To find eternal rest.

Empress Eugenie

The news of the death of the Empress Eugenie, which took place recently in Spain, has evoked profound and widespread regret. She was born in Granada on May 5, 1826, and had thus attained the great age of 94. Two months ago, while staying with the Duke of Alva, her nephew, in Madrid, she underwent an operation for cataract, which was said to have been successful. Although she had long been in feeble health, death came quite unexpectedly. On her father's side Marie Eugenie Montijo, Comtesse de Teba, was descended from the ancient Spanish family of De Guzman of Granada, while her mother was Kirpatrick, a Scotswoman of good family, from whom she is said to have inherited her fair golden hair. There is a tradition that when quite young she consulted a Spanish gitana, who predicted that she would be one day an Empress. A rather romantic story is told of the first time the Comtesse de Teba saw her future husband in 1846, when she was on a visit with her mother to Madame Delessert, the wife of the Prefect of Police, says a writer in the Irish Catholic. While she was there Prince Louis Napoleon was brought in as a prisoner previous to his condemnation to perpetual imprisonment in the fortress of Ham. Through Mademoiselle de Montijo saw Prince Napoleon he did not see her, and he first saw her matchless beauty and grace during the fetes of Compiègne, and he said to her, "Fortune must surely smile upon me, for it will guide me to your side," to which the future empress replied, if you are not successful as you anticipate, come to my country, where we shall enjoy independence, and perhaps be happier than on a throne." When Eugenie de Montijo at length set out for Spain she was the betrothed of Louis Napoleon.

The engagement was formally announced for the first time in "Moniteur" of January, 1853. The emperor, in justifying his marriage, said that he wished frankly to take up before Europe the position that he had conquered Europe as a parvenu, and had chosen a bride who, though like Josephine, was not the issue of a Royal house, but French in her sympathies. Lord Palmerston was lost in admiration of so frank a statement, but it did not commend itself to the French people. That the Marriage was a love match none could doubt, and the

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs. They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency. "I was taken ill with kidney trouble, and became so weak I could scarcely get around. I took medicine without benefit, and finally decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. After the first bottle I felt so much better that I continued its use, and six bottles made me a new woman. When my little girl was a baby, she could not keep anything on her stomach, and we gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla which cured her." Mrs. Thomas L. W. Wallace, Wallingford, Ont.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Remarkable thing was that so cold and calculating a man as Napoleon should at such a crisis of his career have discarded prudence and caution. None however, who witnessed the superb beauty of the bride at his marriage in Notre Dame could wonder at the marvelous fascination exercised over the emperor by Eugenie. The carriages on the occasion were the same as those used at the wedding of the First Napoleon with the Archduchess Marie Louise. The bride's dress was a magnificent triumph of the dressmaker's art, and she was covered with diamonds from head to foot, and she also wore a superb necklace of pearls, regardless of a popular Spanish superstition that the pearls worn by a woman on her wedding-day are emblematical of the tears that she will be destined to shed in after life.

No more magnificent ceremony than the marriage in Notre Dame had been seen within living memory. Overwhelming, indeed, for the bride must have been entrancing entering that solemn nave, which had witnessed some of the most thrilling scenes in French history. Though it is neither the crowning nor the burial place of monarchs, their shadows haunt its mysterious twilight. The service, which was conducted by the Archbishop of Paris, was long and fatiguing, and the empress became so visibly agitated that Count Tascher de la Pagerie, who stood behind her thought she must faint, and heard the emperor cheering her with tender words. She rallied for the Te Deum which followed the Mass, but it was noted that her marvelous beauty paled that day as if with apprehension of sorrow. After the signing of the register the Archbishop and his clergy conducted the newly-married pair to the western entrance. "Everywhere on her passage," it was said, "the young and beautiful empress has received from the people, from the National Guard, and from the army, the most touching and enthusiastic greetings."

Paris raved over her, and stories were told daily of her wit, her generosity, and her charm. The city of Paris voted $24,000 for a set of diamonds to be given to her as a wedding present. She refused it and desired the money to be devoted to charity. Desperately Paris applauded her. The visit of the emperor and empress to Windsor, where Queen Victoria gave them a warm welcome, was one of the happiest events of the empress's life, and laid the foundation of a life-long friendship between the queen and herself. The return visit of the queen and prince consort to Paris was a great success, and did much to establish the empress's position at other courts. On March 16, 1857, the prince imperial was born, and proudly styled by the people L'Enfant de France. The enthusiasm and excitement were intense, and at the empress's request the Pope consented to be his godfather. The baptism was solemnized with great pomp, but the empress had not the strength to hold the child up after the anointing, so the emperor did. Queen Victoria and all the royal family, as indeed the people of the whole of the United Kingdom, sympathized deeply with her, and she had lived ever since a quiet and retired life, devoted to the duties of religion and the poor, respected and loved by all who knew her. Until very recently the empress was a familiar figure of the countryside, driving about the lanes in a little pony carriage, or walking from cottage to cottage on quiet errands of sweet solicitude among the poor. No woman ever had a stranger, more eventful history. None could have brought it to a more harmonious or a more dignified close. May she rest in peace.

WHOOPING COUGH

Her 3 Children Had It.

This disease begins like a simple cold in the head that rapidly goes to the chest. The cough is at first short and sharp, but gradually increases in severity and occurs in sudden spasms. Often vomiting follows a severe attack of coughing, and sometimes there is nose-bleeding. Mothers should never neglect the treatment of whooping cough, for it is much more serious than most people think, as it may be followed by some grave lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia or consumption, since the sufferers power of resistance are often greatly weakened by the violent and exhausting cough.

On the first sign of a "whoop," Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup should be administered, as it helps to clear the bronchial tubes of the collected mucus and phlegm. Mrs. Burton Leopold, New Ross, N.S., writes:—"My three children had the whooping cough so bad last winter, I thought they would choke. I tried many different remedies, but none of them seemed to help. At last I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I was greatly surprised to see how quickly it helped them. I shall always recommend your wonderful remedy to others."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is 35c and 60c a bottle at all druggists and dealers. Put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

In 1858 the attempt on the emperor's life by Orsini much affected the empress. Her majesty established hospitals and convalescent homes in Paris, and personally visited the patients, while her heroic conduct during the cholera at St. Lazare and elsewhere in Paris won all hearts. Her first great grief was the death of her favorite sister, the Duchess d'Albe. Her influence over the emperor was very great, and her dislike and jealousy of any intrigues, notwithstanding, she never forgot her duty as a wife. She was very fond of dress, and no one showed it off to greater advantage; but she thereby encouraged trade, and was by no means personally extravagant. She was deeply religious. Time and space fail to tell of her many doings, when at the height of her glory and power at the Exhibition of 1867; of her visit to the Austrian Court, where the empress took a great fancy to her; of her visit to the Suez Canal, when she had all the world at her feet; and of her brilliant reception at Constantinople.

The failure of the Mexican expedition and the war with Prussia were terrible trials to the empress. Her famous charge to her son, when he left for the seat of war, "Do your duty, Louis," her noble, dignified, calm and courageous attitude when the last sad crisis came, and her romantic flight to England in August, 1870, are matters of history. After her many heartrending adventures she settled down with the exiled emperor, and her distinguished son at Chislehurst, in Kent. Napoleon only lived a few months after his arrival in England, and it was not many years after (in 1879) that their son was killed in Zululand. For him the heartbroken Eugenie erected a beautiful memorial chapel at Farnborough, and here for the rest of her days she lived. Queen Victoria and all the royal family, as indeed the people of the whole of the United Kingdom, sympathized deeply with her, and she had lived ever since a quiet and retired life, devoted to the duties of religion and the poor, respected and loved by all who knew her. Until very recently the empress was a familiar figure of the countryside, driving about the lanes in a little pony carriage, or walking from cottage to cottage on quiet errands of sweet solicitude among the poor. Your Heart! Does it Palpitate?

The component parts of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are indicated to do away with palpitation and other heart weaknesses and thus strengthen both the heart and nerves. Mrs. F. X. Gaultier, Tilbury, Ont., writes:—"During 25 years past I was greatly troubled with palpitation of the heart, and sometimes so much so that those around me thought I would die at any moment, being so much weakened by the sharpness of the palpitation which would last sometimes up to three hours. I had the doctor who kept me taking his medicine to overcome the disease, but to no effect. There was no change at all for the better. Two years ago a friend advised me to use Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I began to use them at once, and at the second box I began to feel some relief, so I continued to use them according to directions, and now I am perfectly well. Before using the pills, I never weighed 100 pounds, now I weigh 117, and feel as if I were young although I am over 66 years of age. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.
