Policemen in Petticoats.

Men's Work Undertaken by Women.

Mr Lewis recently introduced into the Lower House of the New York State Legislature at Albany a Bill empowering the Police Commissioner of New York to appoint twenty women as members of the metropolitan police force. If the Bill is passed the policemen appointed will wear uniforms and receive the same pay as men. Their duty will be to protect women and children in the streets, dancing halls, public parks, and picture theatres.

Recently five wealthy women of Chicago, including Mrs. Joseph Bowen, a well-known philanthropist, offered their services to the mayor as policemen, and suggested that they should be allowed to wear as a uniform a long navy-blue coat provided with brass buttons, a soft navy-blue felt hat, black gloves, and low-heeled walking shoes.

It is interesting to know that a short time back a lady was appointed to the post of police chief in Hunnewell, Kansas. This appointment was a sequel to the election, a little time before, of Mrs. Ella Wilson to the office of mayor. This lady chose Mrs. Rose Osborn from a large number of applicants for the position of chief of the city police, and the latter, just after her appointment, put the machinery of the law in motion against the "blind tigers," as illicit drinking saloons are called in America.

About thirty-five years ago M. Porehet, the chief warden of the prison of Aigle, in the Rhone Valley, married a young woman who proved herself to be a helpmeet indeed, for she made as good a convict-controller as her husband, and on many occasions performed his duties when he was ill. When M. Porehet died the prison governor asked his widow to take his place, and she agreed.

There are said to be several women wardens in Norway who are taken off to look after male convicts.

The first women's jury in Idaho, U.S.A., intercepted a case at Twin Falls the other day by leaving in a body to go home to cook their dinners for their families. They asked the judge to adjourn the case so they might return to their kitchens, and when he refused to do so they put on their hats and filed out of the jury box. After a lengthy absence the women returned and resumed their places without a protest from the Bench.

Practically every trade and profession has its female followers, and now members of the fair sex are taking to the steering of racehorses. A very attractive event in a race meeting at Clairfontaine, in the Department of Orne, in France, last October, was a flat race for women jockeys on hunters over a distance of nine furlongs. Those who lined up at the start were the Comtesse D'Idreille, Baronne La Caze, Mme. Felix Petit, Mme. Garin, Mme. Jeanne de la Palme, and Mme. de la Palme was declared the winner.

Philadelphia recently appointed women as tram-way-car conductors. The company owning the trams in that city proposed to pay members of the fair sex $2.88 a week to act as conductors, against $3.12 a week or $3.16s. at present paid to men.

"The Old Trustee."

A quaint, pretty story was told by the Casino players last evening in "The Old Trustee." If there were dry eyes in the house, they were in the minority, for handkerchiefs were much in evidence. Pathos, intermixed with comedy, is always effective, and the deep interest of a large audience never flagged. It is not often that a Dramatic Company are versatile enough to present serious and pathetic drama equally as well as comedy. That our stock company succeeded so well is greatly to their credit. Mr. George Barr, as the old Trustee, gave a touching picture of a simple, honest old grocery man, and our hearts responded with warm sympathy and made us regret for the time being, that self-interest is the main-spring of most of our actions. As his devoted life partner, Rachel Barr ably seconded his efforts. One could hardly realize it was she who had elicited such hearty laughter in comedy roles. Miss Barlow was their ward and friend, whom they had reared as a baby. She endeared herself to the audience by her brave championship of the old couple. Mr. Reed, as John Packer, their son, made many a childless couple wish for a son like him. A quaint, old character was Mr. Denton, as Solomon Packer, 91 years old, who hid the money up the chimney and caused all the trouble; a very clever characterization. Mr. Joseph Wright acquitted himself admirably, and though we deplored his short coming, we appreciated his good work. Miss Elvira played a female detective, a small part, but was effectively received. The next bill will be "Borrowing a Wife." Judging by the title, it should be a scream, and will be the last opportunity of seeing the Casino players.

A Story Of Prince Leopold.

Anecdotes of kings are legion; but few are more delightful than that told of Prince Leopold, the recently deceased Regent of Bavaria, in the 'Journal des Debats.' The Regent was extremely hospitable, receiving many guests and keeping open table, to which came in turn officers, scientists, artists, manufacturers—all the high society of Munich. Himself the wielder of an excellent knife and fork, he took the pleasures of the table seriously, and desired that all his guests should do the same. Some weeks before his fatal illness he fell asleep at a dinner party immediately after the first course. His guests who saw this were restrained by respect for etiquette from waking him, but continued their conversation in a low tone. The servants did not dare to continue serving the dinner. The Prince continued to sleep, and soon commenced to snore. The guests continued their conversation in somewhat louder tones, but the Prince slept on for two hours, during which time no one allowed himself to leave his place. The guests sat fished in the same room with a marvellously appointed dinner. Finally, Prince Leopold awoke. He took a hurried glance round the table, and saw only a number of perfectly correct faces pretending to have noticed nothing. Persuaded that his slight absence had passed completely unremarked, he said quietly: "Now, let us go and take coffee." The guests rose accordingly, and proceeded to the dining room. They were served with coffee, liquors, cigars. The Prince, thoroughly refreshed by his sleep, indulged in a great deal of excellent conversation which lasted till midnight. The party then broke up, and the guests departed, furnished with hanger, with an official smile upon their lips.—Westminster Gazette.

Dish Washing.

BY H. L. RANN.

Dish washing is a gentle form of penitence which purges the female sex with relentless step from the cradle to the grave. It is the only kind of housework which a woman can't go away and forget for a week without causing the pantry to look like a rummage sale.

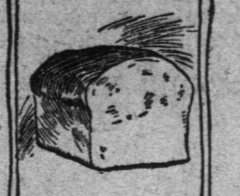

Dish washing always comes at a time when a woman would rather curl upon a hammock and a house gown and lounge herself in a love story to the depth of several feet. If a woman passes up the supper dishes in order to dissipate at the annual meeting of cemetery association, she will run out of breakfast implements and have to serve the soft-boiled eggs in soup plates which hadn't been disturbed since the wedding.

It is usually customary to wipe dishes after they have been washed, and some clever, domineering women lead their husbands into the kitchen by the ear, label them with a gingham apron and turn them loose on the crockery. There ought to be a law against this cruel custom, which is so humiliating to the proud spirit of man and causes him to go around with parboiled fingers. If there is anything which will remove the glamour from the state of connubial felicity it is the sight of a ham-fisted husband trying to crowd his right hand and a wiping towel into a Mason jar at one and the same time.

Dish washing has a tendency to encourage economy in the use of superfluous tableware, and some men become so well trained that they never think of asking for an extra knife with which to eat their pie. It also does away with the individual butter plate and the reckless disbursement of teaspoons. There is never any trouble in the home when a man is willing to use one plate as a haven of rest for everything from lamb stew to rhubarb pie.

If the men of this country had to wash the dishes for a straight week, there would be more coupon meat tickets sold.
