For nearly thirty years he had heard blue ruin predicted and the Speeches from the Throne characterized as the baldest The Opposition had to criticize and they must expect criticisms as a matter of course, however, but they vere merely perfunctory. The reduction in the Tariff last session had not been a death-bed repentance but carrying out of a solemn pledge. Mr Kent had played the part of Cassandra. The bottom had not dropped ou The people were taxed a million dollars a year less than in 1882. They were not going to revise the Tariff policy of last year. They would make the better-to-do pay as far as possible. The fact that no final certificate had been given for any of the branches showed that they were keeping the contractor to his contract. As to cost of finishing, he estimated that $1,500,000 more than had been raised in the previous two loans would provide enough to finish the work contracted for. As to the payment in bonds instead of gold, it might be imagined the contractor had nothing to say on the matter. Government had the pay of the laborers raised and the contractor received payment in gold instead of bonds. As general, and not particularly against Newfoundland. ## and seconder for the Address in Reply had performed their tasks. He thought the House had seldom heard their duties in this respect more acceptably to the House at large. As to the Speech they had commented on it was the baldest and least satisfactory in his experience. The one feature which stood out in prominence was the reference to the revenue for the first half of the current fiscal year which is below the estimates. This shortage abundantly justified the criticism that had been directed last session at the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance. On that occasion it had been pointed out that the budget was an election kite, and that it would be necessary at the next session to impose taxes to meet the shortage which must ensue. What was pointed out then had now come to pass. It had been said that the shortage might be attributed to the disturbance of trade on account of the year being Election year. But surely the Minister if Finance knew when he laid his financial proposals before Election year. He could hardly plead he "forgot" it was Election year. He should have taken that fact into consideration at that time. He had been told he was not justified on financial grounds in his reductions and the Opposition prediction had come true. The criticism which had been made by the Opposition to the railway contracts and the loans had been justified by the event. Time was the great justifier. At the present time there was not a single branch line completed. Not even the Bonavista branch was finished. The Government Engineer had not given his certificate of a completion in a single case. He spoke subject to cor-correct him if he was wrong. As the Prime Minister did not deny the statement, he repeated that not a single branch was completed and been pass ed by the Government Engineer giv ing his certificate of completion. That meant not a single branch line had been finally paid for. There was and would be money to be paid for finishing even the Bonavista branch, as well as the other branches. Further, there were many extras to be paid for.

Bargains

Under the terms of the contract, the rolling stock on one branch would cover all that the contractor had to provide for the $15,000 a mile. The rolling stock on all the other branches would have to be paid for as the mode of payment under the con-agreed to pay the contractor in gold

NEGOTIATIONS FAIL.

Special to Evening Telegram. LONDON, To-day The Unionist Leader, in a speech at Bristol Hall last night, confirmed the eport that negotiations between his party and the Liberals for a settlenent of the Ulster Question had failed. He said there have been converations between party leaders, but hus far they have been without result, and I am grieved to say that o far as I can judge, there can be no esults. We are declining rapidly, if something does not turn the current nevitably to a civil war, which will shatter the whole fabric of our na ional existence, and leave us exposed to dangers from without. We must ssume, continued Mr. Law, that it s the present intention of the Government to carry their policy to the oiter end, and on that assumption it s our duty by every means in our power, to prevent them from comnitting what we believe to be a great Parliament has not the right o sell the people of Ulster into slavery. If Ulster is to be dragoond, the order must be given only as he declared will of the people. he Government persists; if Premier Asquith is right, he will lose nothing a general election, and he has an alternative in the referendum. Th lovernment is ready, apparently, to ace civil war rather than face ti eople; we have given a pledge that f Ulster resists, we will support her and we intend with the help of the Almighty, to keep that pledge.
