

Grand Millinery Opening.

Springtime is in the air at this store, and its beauty and freshness greet you on every turn. But to enjoy the fullness of its splendor you must visit our

Millinery Show Room

On Saturday, the 22nd inst.,

The Day of our Spring Millinery Opening.

On this occasion Dame Fashion will unfold to her devotees all the richness of her

FASHION FANCIES for Spring Season.

Other seasons we have won the palm and praise for the wealth and extent of our opening displays, but our efforts for Saturday will surpass anything of the kind ever attempted by us.

As for styles, word pictures at their best can do them meagre justice.

The exquisite model HATS and BONNETS personally selected in New York, the great fashion centre of America, together with the original creations from our own WORK SHOPS form a collection that possesses a charm of style and excellence that words do not adequately describe.

THIS MILLINERY COLLECTION

with all its novelties is an exquisite array of FASHIONDOM reflecting the correct ideas of the FASHION LEADERS in the Old World and the New. A visit to this store on SATURDAY will make this small world of Fashiondom pass in review before you.

It is reception day for one and all, our invitation knows no limit. Ladies in Town and vicinity, friends or strangers, hosts or guests, with gentlemen included are invited to come.

Keep the day and date in mind.

HANDWRITING EXPERTS.

It would seem from the frequent appearance of handwriting experts in the courts and the charges they make for their services that there must be something occult about the science of chirography and that the ways of the handwriting expert must be queer and devils. To hear one of these men explain his science, however, it all appears exceptionally simple. One of the best known of these experts a few days ago explained his plan of work in this wise:

"When a writing of unidentified authorship is submitted to me, I aim to determine the dissimilarities it exhibits from a conventional standard. Every person writes with a certain general movement, these movements being classified under the heads of forearm movements, wrist movements and finger movements. The trained eye can see at a glance according to what general system the writing is penned.

"This anonymous writing we call the 'suspect.' The suspect is now carefully analyzed. Every letter in every word is dissected, and each departure from the standard is noted. These dissimilarities, taken in full, will be invariably found to be characteristic of the writer. In spite of himself they will appear to a greater or less extent in everything that he writes. "Having thus analyzed the suspect, I take up the specimens of known authorship and regarded as being very likely of identical authorship with the suspect. These specimens we call the exemplars. They are analyzed and dissected, just as in the case of the suspects. It will be very easy in most cases to say that certain of the exemplars could not have been penned by the author of the suspect, and after more careful examination it will be possible to say with accuracy whether the suspect was written by the writer of one of the exemplars, and if so, which one.

"In cases of disguised handwriting the difficulty is generally not greatly increased. A person simply cannot avoid betraying himself in his penmanship, and although he may successfully disguise a few letters, in the main the natural dissimilarities from the accepted standard will be evident and unmistakable.

"In cases of disguised handwriting the expert must first determine the method of the disguise so as to know what are the real and what the unreal features of the person's regular handwriting which are here displayed. Having determined the method the rest is easy, for an adjustment can be made in every case, just as the surveyor allows in his calculations for abnormal influences upon his compass."

POINTS ABOUT DIVING.

Rules For Making a Graceful Plunge Into the Water.

A good diver may occasionally lose his balance when taking a high dive, but being generally cool headed he can regain it or at any rate sufficiently so to prevent injury to himself, for if he came from a great height flat on to his stomach he would, we are told, be torn open, most probably with fatal results. While this presumably is anatomically possible, it is doubtful whether there is any actual case on record among medical and diving authorities.

Divers sometimes go deaf through not sufficiently protecting the face and head. Many find it difficult to drop the head sufficiently to get it well between the arms; the result is they get some tremendous blows on the head, and if the water is struck sideways the ear gets most of the concussion, and the result will not probably be a rupture of the membrane of the tympanum. A little medicated wool, dipped in oil and placed in the ears, is said to be a preventive to such an accident, but it is disregarded by most experts.

In diving you must have perfect control over yourself or you will get nervous and lose your head. Confidence, as and the proper amount of practice will make each successive part of the dive more or less mechanical. The tension experienced by some divers is over when they spring, with others not until they enter the water. But this is chiefly a matter of temperament, for others feel no tension whatever and appreciate each part, the filling of the lungs with air, the spring, the falling through space and the entering and cleaving of the water.

One of the chief dangers of high diving is that of coming over on one's back. Divers often get the backs of their legs fearfully bruised by neglecting to keep them quite straight and allowing them to bend backward from the knees.

William Henry, secretary of the English Life Saving society, says: "According to the rules of the Life Saving society, framed for the purpose of the national graceful diving competition, a dive is defined as follows: A leap is made into the air, the body is then straightened almost horizontally, the arms are turned at once toward the water and the legs thrown up for the downward drop. On entering the water the arms must be extended in advance of the head, the forefingers must be in contact and the palms of the hands held downward. The thighs and the legs from the hips to the great toes must be kept close together and the feet turned back. No dive is counted in which the competitor when entering the water turns on his back."

Gave Napoleon Advice.

Napoleon Bonaparte had no more devoted and disinterested friend than Gaspard Monge, the illustrious academician and founder of L'Ecole Polytechnique. On one occasion he demonstrated his regard by giving the great general some unwelcome advice. Napoleon announced his intention of reading a paper to the French institute. Monge frankly expressed his disapproval of the plan.

"You have not time to write a good paper, and you cannot afford to write a poor one. The eyes of the world are upon you. Whatever you write will be severely criticised."

Napoleon was astounded and indignant at this plain speaking, but he never wrote the paper.

Quite Proper.

Orthodox Mother—Ether, how many times must I tell you it is wicked to pick flowers on the Sabbath?
Ethel—But, mother, I'm only picking real Sabbath ones—Adam's thread and needle, timothy, Solomon's seal and Jack in the pulpit!
