

That Tired Feeling

The marked benefit which people overcome by That Tired Feeling derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." J. B. Emerson, a well known merchant of Auburn, Maine, says: "About five years ago I began to suffer with very severe pains in my stomach, gradually growing worse. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, being convinced that it was troubled with dyspepsia, indigestion, and liver and kidney trouble. Improved at once and am certainly very much better and feel more like working."

THE FRASER DISASTER.

Discovery of the Ill-Fated Steamer's Hull, But No Bodies Found.

NORTH BAY, Nov. 1.—The search for the bodies of the unfortunate shantymen drowned on the ill-fated steamer Fraser has so far proved fruitless, and divers have returned home. The hull of the burned boat was discovered in the bottom of the lake. The missing yawl was found with a hole in her bow, and a glove was picked up on Goose Island, but no trace of any of the bodies or even of the boiler and engine of the boat could be found.

ON NIAGARA'S BRINK.

A Boating Party Narrowly Escape Death at the Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Nov. 13.—A crowd of over 500 people, standing on the banks of the river, witnessed one of the most thrilling rescues which has ever taken place at the falls. Yesterday afternoon two young Italians went rowing with their sweethearts. The men knew nothing about the river or its dangers, and rowed ahead unconscious of the fact that they were rushing to almost certain death. Several people on the shore saw the danger and in a little while a great crowd had gathered and succeeded in attracting the attention of the rowers, who saw their danger and tried to get away.

They were in the maddest part of the current and could not make the slightest headway. Gradually the boat was drawn toward the brink of the falls. Two young men, familiar with every turn and twist of the treacherous waters, went out in boats and managed to reach the imperiled voyagers. The young men got a line to the boat and ran their own skills behind big rocks, which held them against the current. The boat was then a very short distance from the brink and after an hour's hard work was drawn to the big rocks and the quartet got out and were assisted to shore. Their boat swung round in the water a few minutes and then went over the falls.

How They Should Be Treated in London.

A Children's Aid Society a Necessity.

Mr. J. J. Kelso Describes the Objects of Such an Organization—A Committee Appointed to Further the Work—The Meeting Small but Earnest.

There was not a very large attendance at the meeting in the City Council chamber last evening which had been called by the mayor to consider the advisability of forming a Children's Aid Society in London. The enthusiasm and interest were not, however, hid under a basket, and after Mr. Kelso had explained the act affecting the matter and some discussion had taken place, the meeting affirmed its belief in the necessity of such an organization. A committee was then appointed to decide upon further action.

Mr. J. J. Kelso, the Government official interested, spoke in a clear and fluent manner. His candid and explicit elucidation of the principles of the act was much admired. The interests of children are well conserved in the hands of Mr. Kelso.

Mr. Thomas McCormick took the chair. Mr. Kelso said that he hoped none of those present, who were interested in the cause of children would be discouraged by the small attendance. They all knew that every great movement was attended by small beginnings. Every great reform had been achieved through the enthusiasm of a few.

After having spoken of the manner in which children were ill-used in heathen countries, and how even in England, in early times, children had been brutally ill-used, Mr. Kelso said that almost four-fifths of the crime committed was an outcome of the neglect under which children had labored during youth. The law which had recently been adopted by the Legislature of Ontario provided for the formation of children's aid societies in the cities and towns of the Province, and every assistance and encouragement was given to such organizations. The society when organized was empowered to appoint a committee for the purpose of preventing the neglect which too often characterized the upbringing of children. The law provided that if parents were known to disregard their responsibility, the children could be taken from them by the courts, committed to the Children's Society and placed in a refuge or shelter, which was to be instituted in every municipality of more than 10,000 population. Such children could then be placed at learning trades, or educated, or benefited by other advantageous means. The municipality had to pay towards the support of these children, and the parents were also compelled to give money in this direction. The law also provided that if a child was found to be in need of aid, the sum, and the civic authorities would then have to collect this amount from the defaulting parent. As far as possible the law provided that the children should, as speedily as possible, be placed in Christian families. If necessary their board might be paid, but as far as could be the children should be received into good families merely because they were in need of it. The more loved, the more guarded them against any of those contaminations which were always incidental to institution life, and also afforded them opportunities of growing up with all other children in the community. In a great many cases the foster-parents became much attached to these homeless little ones, and gave to them a permanent and happy home.

In South Victoria a law similar to the one he was expounding had been adopted and found to work admirably. There all the industrial schools had been closed and the inmates had been placed in good homes. This worked a great reformation among the youthful element of that colony.

The chief difficulty, said Mr. Kelso, would probably arise in securing desirable homes, but to aid in this it was provided that a visiting committee should be appointed in each electoral district. This committee of six representative persons would be required to see that the children were properly treated, and they would also inquire for homes where little ones would be given mother-love. They would practically be the local guardians of all dependent children.

In order to have the work somewhat systematized—and to see that the provisions of the act were carried out—the Government had appointed a superintendent, which position he had the honor of filling.

While some of the existing societies in London touched upon the work of the Children's Aid Society, the field was mainly one which had not yet been occupied. If there was any movement which should receive the consideration of Christian people, it was a work such as this. The not simply emphasized the principle that all children had a right to education, to good influences, to the formation of character, and to fair and just treatment. Canada had not been doing its whole duty towards its dependent children in the past. In the Victoria Industrial School there were to-day almost 200 boys who there because they had not been fairly treated in early life. The new organization would obviate such a condition of affairs. English people sending their children to this country through various organizations and placing them in good Christian homes. Why should Canadians not do similarly for their own unfortunate little ones?

He had heard it said that there was not much need for a Children's Aid Society in London. No one could make such a remark conscientiously. In London, England, a society for the prevention of cruelty to children had been established some years ago. During the first year's work only about 120 cases had been unearthed, while last year 8,000 cases were prosecuted. He was sure that a similar condition of affairs—though, of course, on a much smaller scale—would be found to exist in the Forest City. The necessity of such an institution, he was assured, would become increasingly evident if the work were carried on as it ought to be.

When Mr. Kelso concluded his address the chairman called for remarks from those present.

Rev. Mr. Softly thought that a Children's Aid Society was much needed. The existence of such an institution would do away with the necessity of spending money upon other charities. He wished to move a resolution that in the opinion of the meeting it was highly desirable to establish a society in London similar to that provided for in the act.

Dr. Hutchinson, medical health officer, seconded the motion. He would be willing to do everything in his power to forward the interests of the organization.

Mr. J. H. Flock wanted to know whether the Government was willing to assume some of the pecuniary responsibility, or whether the municipality would have to bear the full burden?

Mr. Kelso remarked that the city of London would be expected to provide the necessary expenses for the dependent children within its limit and that the various counties would have to do the same for their children. The Ontario Government met the expense incurred in the general supervision of the whole work.

Mr. Flock said that he was sorry some members of the council were not present. The act made it incumbent upon the municipality to sustain a refuge. It would, on this account, have been well if some of the city fathers had been present. He did not know that anything further could be done than the affirmation of the motion before the chair and the appointment of a committee to secure the co-operation of the City Council.

Mr. G. W. Armstrong observed that he would like to hear Mr. Kelso explain the religious phase of the question. It was not to be supposed that all neglected children were Protestants or, on the other hand, all Catholics.

Mr. Kelso answered that when children were being placed in private families the denominations in which they had been brought up should have to be considered.

Mr. James Crawford, inspector for the Humane Society, said that he had seen innumerable instances of negligence in regard to the bringing up of children which led him to be a firm believer in the necessity for a Children's Aid Society.

The resolution in favor of the establishment of a Children's Aid Society here was unanimously carried.

The following committee was then appointed to work out the details of the act in its local application: Mayor Eavery, Ald. J. W. Jones, Ald. Cox, Messrs. James Magee (county crown attorney), Thomas McCormick, Andrew Thompson, D. S. Parry, St. Lawrence, Flock, Medames, Carrae, Grogan, Dorr, Hutchinson, Bomar, Labatt and Darch.

Two Thousand Houses Destroyed and 300 Lives Lost by Flood—44 Boats Sunk and 143 Fishermen Drowned.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 13.—The steamer China brings news of two severe calamities in Japan.

One was a flood at Oita, in which 300 persons were drowned, and over 2,000 houses destroyed.

The other was the foundering of 44 fishing boats off the western coast during a typhoon, and the loss of all their occupants, numbering 142 men.

A LITTLE GIRL'S SAD FATE.

Caught by the Neck in a Swing and Strangled.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Nov. 13.—A peculiarly sad and tragic fate met a little 4-year-old girl here a day or two ago which has just come to light. She was Lizzie Scott, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott, and she was playing in the yard with her little brother about a swing. The boy started for the house to get an apple, and the little girl called after him: "Bring me some, too." In a few moments the lad returned, but to his horror he saw his little sister hanging in the air suspended under the neck by the swing rope. He rushed to her and lifted her off the rope, and he found her dead. Medical aid was summoned, but the little one was dead. She had mounted on a little express cart with the swing rope in her hand. In leaning on the rope the cart caught in the rope and fell forward with the rope across her neck, the force being so great that she was unable to extricate herself from the noose.

Judge Taschereau's Funeral.

MONTREAL, Nov. 13.—The funeral of the late Judge Taschereau, of the Supreme Court of Canada, took place at the Basilica this morning. The cortege was very large. The chief mourners were deceased sons and relatives. The members of the local Cabinet followed in the procession, as did also the members of the different courts, the mayor of Quebec and the councilors in a body and the prominent citizens of Quebec. A great number of the Christian Brothers' pupils preceded the hearse. Archbishop Desjardins officiated. The body was interred in the Belmont Cemetery.
