by the use of Royal Baking Powder is considerable. Royal is economical, because it possesses more leavening power and goes further.

Royal saves also because it always makes fine, light, sweet food; never wastes good flour, butter and eggs.

More important still is the saving in hearth. Royal Baking Powder adds anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

There is no baking mowder so ecenomical in practical use, no matter how little others may ecst. as the Royal Alum baking powders are sold at a low price, but they are extravagant because they make the food un-healthful. The contained use of alumin food causes the most serious disorders to the alimentary organs.

The ancient Briton, the steel-clad Roman, the blonde Saxon, who found his home on the tossing sea wave, the darkhaired Dane and sturdy Norman, who came across the narrow sea and fought his way to the throne. In the of Hanover, their solls drink wild enthusiasm to the member of that house, the truest and the best of women that ever sat upon an empire's throne. (Hearty applause.) These all went to make up a British nation. In their own beloved Scotland the bitterest intolerance had prevailed. As Barrie represents one of his facters in "The Little Minister" saying, "Sooner than hae a U. P. minister in an auld licht poopit, I'd burn in hell-fire for-ever." And yet in a land where such intolerance had prevailed, just a few weeks ago two great churches had become one, and Canada had shown them the way to such a union. He had St. Thomas, Nov. 21.—Wheat, per bu. high hope then for Canada. We had veterans of '27, 60c; flaxseed, per cwt, $3 25 to $4; and '66 and '85, but in the past year her sons had stepped in line with the best and bravest of the British empire (applause), and this very day in the heart of the empire, in great old London, the proudest and the best vied with one another in seeking to do honor to sons of Canada. And these men who did honor to us in the hour of danger, who, when the battle thundered, and the red flame of death smote their evehalls, held their place undaunted. What made them strong but the memory of the Canadian home, and the loving hearts that held them in tenderest affection. (Applause.) Let all stand together in the great work that the future has laid upon us. We all had prejudices, and he who said that he had not was liar or fool, but let them forget these in the common national sentiment, and then they might hope when another century had run its course that Canada would have a front place among the nations of the earth, and would write her name large on the roll of the glory of the peoples. (Continued applause.)

D. C. Fraser, M. P.

"The Scot away from Scotland," was one of the most enthusiastically honored toasts of the evening. After the appliause which followed Mr. J. W. poses, said the speaker, and the fusion McIntosh's singing of "Scots Wha of races in Canada is showing the Hae" had subsided, Duncan C. Fraser, M.P., the genial giant of Guysboro, N.S., rose to reply. For over half an hour he moved his hearers to laughter or held them thrilled, by his eloquence. He remarked humorously that he had come from New Scotland, and judging by the quality of the speaking so far, the gathering would soon learn that there was one Scot away from home unnecessarily. To bring a man all the way from Nova Scotia to reply to a toast when there was such talent available here was almost a waste of energy quite foreign to the Scotch na-The theme assigned to him, said ture. Mr. Fraser, was "The Scotchman Away From Home," but the term was somewhat of a misnomer. He was the third in descent since his forefathers had left the old shores of Scotland, yet he did not consider that he was away from Scotland yet. In treating his subject, should he tell them of the Queen of Morocco-a Scotchwoman; of the admiral of the Chinese navy-a Scotchman? of the high officials in Turkey Russia and other countries-Scotchmen? of the Scotchmen all over the world who stay by their job and

He would speak, he said, of the riches with which Scotland dowers her sons before they leave her shores. When the Englishman and the Irishman leave their native lands to seek their fortunes, they take with them memories of their country, but the Scotchman takes with him a better capital. He takes with him four precious jewels, more valuable to him wherever he goes than a bank account.

The first of these jewels is a robust constitution. Here the speaker was interrupted by shouts of laughter and cries of "Look at him." You should remember, he answered, that I am the third in descent from a native Scotchman, and besides 1 am the small boy of the family. The Scotchmen fed well on plain food, and this gives him the nerves, the muscle and the brain that helped him to win success. Why can we not go back to common-sense methods of living as did our forefathers? They lived and dealt with mature, and they acquired the constitution which enabled them to endure and overcome the difficulties and trials of new coun-to think for himself. One thing that cers and congratulated them upon the was taught in the old days in Scot- success of the annual supper. land not taught now, even in the parochial schools, is the fact that each child was a thinking entity, to be dealt with as an individual and not in the mass. The child was taught to act and think in his own proper place, and was supposed to be ready to give his own individual opinion, formed on individual conviction, because it was held that some day he would be called up to give an account, not only of each act, but of each thought. The third jewel possessed by every Scolchman was his adaptability for commerce in its larger sense, meaning a nation. The young men of today need to learn that they should apply them-selves to the work immediately before them if they would hope to attain to success on higher levels. The pioneer Scotchman was not ashamed of any sort of work, but he was ashamed to be a loafer or an idler. Any work was considered nobler than idleness. The speaker feared the present generation is losing this characteristic of its forefathers. The pioneer Scotchman's aim was not the mere obtaining of by any meians, but the serving of promotion, and promotion 11. Honest work brought its best returns in Character, and not in money.

The Scotchman's fourth jewel was a fervid attachment to his native land, that made him a better citizen of his adopted country. It was the possession of qualities like these that helped in the building up of Canada into what it is today, and these things constitute the foundation of character-building, and the building of nations.

The speaker said that as a child he knew the geography of Scotland-its strathspeys and hills better than those of Canada, yet he loved the hills and mountains and lakes of Canada better, and the maple was a dearer tree to him than all the trees of Scotland. Providence had placed him here to live his life, and the spirit which he had inherited from his forefathers had led him to endeavor to live here as they had lived there. The characteristics of the land from which they sprang, the thrift and health of its sons, had enabled the Scotch to hold their own wherever they had gone. In this Dominion, said Mr. Fraser, we were all one in a way which some of the people have yet to learn. Out of the many elements of which the nation is made up, a better life is being evolved. He believed firmly in pura way of forgetting the difficulties and race antipathies that have so long environed them. The world over Scotchmen are found doing their duty, whether as soldiers, as sailors, or in any walk of life. Let all hold fast to the traditions of their forefathers and follow in their footsteps, laying deeper the foundations of individual character and making the land great one hundred years hence, let them who gather to do honor to St. Andrew's Day say of those gathered now that they did their duty and left Canada in a better position for its own future and for the world. In conclusion Mr. Fraser said that it was a long way from Nova Scotia to London, yet he would willingly and cheerfully come to enjoy the luxury of being present.

Sister Societies.

The toast to "Sister Societies" was honored fervently, and the company sang their praises as folly good fellows. Mr. E. T. Essery, president of street. St. George's Society, replied on behalf of that organization. His speech was characterized by all the vigor and, ability that has made Mr. Essery famous as an after-dinner speaker. He thanked them, he said, for asking him to reply to the toast. "We have heard songs tonight that warmed the heart's blood of Englishmen and Irishmen and Scotchmen alike," he said, and added: "We have had glorious banquets in the past, but they were not equal to this tonight." He paid a sincere tribute to the societies for the excellent work in which they were vying with each other.

Mr. John Stevely replied for the Irish

Benevolent Society, in the unavoidable absence of President Forrestal, and he fairly carried his audience along with him in one of the most eloquent, even if one of the shortest, speeches of the evening. With Celtic ardor he described the aims and achievements of the Irish, and the splendid results that had come through the happy intermingling of Scotch and Irish and English qualities. The banquet was ended by singing "God Save the Queen," and with looked arms, "Auld Lang Syne." The gen-

TRAMP SMOKER

Lacrosse Club's Entertainment a Big Success-Good Programme,

The tramp smoker given by the London lacrosse club in the city hall last was little to him if he did not deserve | night drew an immense aggregation of the knights of the road, in which all brands of the typical sons of rest were bunched. The duties of chairman for the evening fell upon Mr. A. B. Cox, and well he filled them, hustling the programme through without delay. The opening march of the tramps caused no end of merriment. Music was supplied for this grand march by Frank Gruber, and it soon developed into a ragtime cakewallk. The first prize for the most realistic tramp fell to Charley Johns, the popular goal-keeper of London's champion hockey team. The prize was a box of 50 cigars. Charley tells numerous thrilling stories of dodging stray dogs and policemen on the way to the hall. Jim Fleming came in a close second and received a hundsome case pipe. Police Magistrate Love, the official judge, had to leave early in the evening, and his powers were eguted to Mr. W. H. Edgecombe, ho filled the position very satisfactorily. Songs by Mesers. Birmingham, O'Neill and Schussler were all encored, and Mr. Birmingham made a hit with his black face monologue. George Black sang "Asleep in the Deep," in a manwhich won him a warm encore, and Harley Davidson's whistling solo was one of the features of the even-ing. Tom Barber and George Ballantyne sparred four rounds to the great amusement of the crowd. Mr. John
