Stag Picnic of The Manhattanites

Glorious and Giddy Time Was Spent at Port Stanley.

its winter's sleep on Saturday, when over 80 Manhattanites, who hail from committed some indiscretion. Port Stanley was awakened from a club of the same name, held a stag picnic, leaving London at 1:30 p.m., by special cars. A quick run was made, everybody arriving in good time, to carry out their afternoon's enjoyment.

After having their photograph taken, they retired to Forbes' field ball park on the beach, where an excellent program of sports and baseball matches was held. The races were keenly contested, and on account of the judges being a trifle slow, some of the runners were left off the prize list. However, the judges, who were Bill Chris, Templeton, Josiah Beggs and Dan Matches, were made to pay the penalty by rolling peanuts along the sandy shore of Lake Erie in full view of all present. The closing part of the program was the most interesting of all, when the baseball championship was decidthere being four teams entered. All of the players are cripples that have been turned bac, by the big leagues, but despite their advanced age they produced a good article of ball. In the first game McCormick's Pool Sharks defeated Berry's Soloists cramps before the game was finished, McFie's Good Lookers defeated Pirie's weeks' quarantine although Beggs and Templeton, were each presented with a biscuit for their trouble, while Umpire Horner, who has dreams of becoming one of Ban Johnson's officials, was kept busy dodging compliments and obstacles.

A Riot Call. A riot call was sent to the Port Stanley police, the chief sending a squad of his best men, who escorted the official to the station, thereby saving him from being lynched by the angry mob. The prize for the best team in uniform was awarded to Captain Berry's team, they having suits of the latest Bulgarian cayle, while the other teams were dressed in suits of German hobo, a style that has not reached this society yet, the managers of the teams getting their uniforms direct from Paris. A feature of th afternoon was an exhibition to be given by Messrs. Prodgers and Oatman, on how they play hockey on the Pacific coast, but on account of the mild weather and soft little lad named Thorne, son of W. J. ice they were compelled to call it off. By special request the roller coaster was operated, which seemed to please the older members.

One Accident. The only accident of the day occurred when Joe Beggs, a young man of 20, fell into the lake when he attempted to take a picture of the fish he was going to catch. Outside of getting wet he is none the worse for his adventure. Everybody had a good time and the success of the picnic was due to the picnic committee. It is the intention of the ciub to hold two or three more outings before the end of this
