PIONEER SETTLER OF SOUTH COWICHAI

Mr. George Bartlett Tells of Results of Agricultural Experi ments Extending Over Twenty-six Years

Twenty-six years spent in any district entitles a man to speak with authority on the advantages which it possesses. He is more qualified still to speak, on the agricultural possibilities at all events, when over a quarter of a century is spent in experimenting to and out what the capabilities of the

Mr. George Bartlett, the pioneer agriculturist of South Cowichan is at present visiting Victoria. Twenty-six years go he took up a large tract of bench lands in that district and since then has on experimenting on a large scale conclusions he has reached are that South Cowichan (which contains some acres) is an ideal district for the raising of all sorts of small fruits. For apple growing it cannot be beaten throughout any portion of the Cowichar district of the Island. It is also ideal for poultry raising. The land is all comparatively level, of red clay loam in erspersed with alder bottom, and alnost free from frost. The district which ies to the south of Cowichan Bay is heltered on the north by Mount Tsoualim. The land requires no irrigation s readily cleared an can be purchased pulation of the district is about ree hundred, and a number of new tlers have gone in since the commencement of the present year. There are good roads, three schools, two churches, and a rural telephone system. All kinds of fish are caught in wichan Bay which bounds the disct. At the boom at the head of the ay there is excellent trout fishing. eer, pheasants, willow and blue grouse abound while occasionally bear and anther are seen. Through the efforts of Mr. Bartlet numbers have been induced to settle South Cowichan. He is publicity areau in himself. And he is something fore. The sympathy with which he has stened to the ambitions of new comers and the spontaneous and practical adice he has given to them, have been the means of inducing many to stay on the Island, after they had almost be ome heartbroken at their prospects. Those people to whom he gave the advice of his experience have invariably prospered and there are those in Victoria and elsewhere on the Island today
