Marseilles, June 30.—A soldier detained in the military prison here has furnished the authorities with details of the plot to kill President Carnot, which was concocted at Cette, where the soldier was stationed at the time. He says after Vaillant and Henry were executed seven anarchists, whose names he gives drew lots to decide which of the number was to kill M. Carnot. The lot fell to Santo, whose real name it is now said is Santo Cesario. "The assassin," the soldier says, was "crazy with delight at having drawn the prize in the lottery of murder."

On Saturday night this place was visited by a severe thunder storm. The lightning struck a house belonging to John Thibedeau. It damaged the chimney, tore shingles from the roof, left some of the rafters in splinters from end to end. It also entered four sleeping rooms, precipitating plaste, and laths to the floor. One mirror was found in another room, in numberless pieces, and the clock thrown into the hall in a shattered condition. Those living in the house experienced nothing more than a general shock, the electrical current confining itself to the roof, walls and partitions.

President Carnot by discharging a pistol at him while seated in his carriage. While raising the weapon for a second time, the would-be assassin was overpowered. He was a Frenchman named Jean Nicholas Perrain, and was insane. Another attempt, almost identical in character, was made in July, 1891, while the president was passing along the avenue de la Republique in his carriage, the miscreant being a lunatic who had just escaped from an asylum.

The President of the French republic was well paid for his services. He received a salary of $220,000, a free residence in the Elysee palace, and an allowance of $60,000 for household expenses.
