poetry. THE SONG OF THE IRISH.

(From Felix Farley's Bristol Journal.)

Bread,-Bread,-Bread ! In mercy send us aid ; Famine looks with a ghastly stare At the havoc Death has made ! Bread,-Bread,-Bread ! Alone we might brave the storm : But we look on our stricken infants round, The mother's shrivelled form!

Bread,-Bread,-Bread ! Even sorrow hath gone to sleep; A stupor rests on the famished soul We starve but cannot weep: Want hatb come as an armed man And hunger, and pain, and cold ; Give but the rich man's crumbs that fall, We ask not for your gold !

God ! put forth thine hand, And touch the poisoned earth; And give the plants throughout our isle A new and healthy birth! Remove the blights that rest O'er all the land, with power : God of the hungry, hear our prayer, Now, in the trying hour!

Bread .- Bread .- Bread ! Low in the dust we lie; Jesus, Son of David, hear, Art Thou not passing by ? Thy voice is in the blas Thy steps are on the wave, Aid us with thine own right arm, Thou the strong to save !

Bread,-Bread,-Bread 1 Ye of the festal hall, With happy faces smiling round, In God's high name we call; By the cold and silent hearth, And by our stricken dead, We charge ye, ere the sun go down,

To give our children Bread, St. Helier's, 18th Feb., 1847. PERSONNE.
