

every exertion for that purpose. Confidence had vanished; and with it all spirit of resistance. If, instead of extending over so considerable a space, those troops had been formed in close column, the confusion that took place might easily have been avoided; and in case of a retreat's becoming necessary, it might have been made in good order, our troops still keeping up their fire.—p. 170.

THE END.

---

Erratum in the Appendix.

Page 383, line 16, for all read most.