

In this connection of course the jury is enjoined that it must find upon the evidence, and solely upon the evidence, properly admissible under the judge's direction and that it must in like manner take the law of the case from the judge. This is manifestly as it should be and verdicts rendered under proper observance of such instructions are in the main effective.