That is not to be done here, thought the bishop. And just here he paid the Canadian country road its just due. "It is simply awful," commented his lordship. "In England we have the smoothest roads imaginable." In spite of the roughness of the going, the bishop expressed pleasure in the trip, as it was his first view of Canadian country viewed at close hand He was also glad of the relief and rest the short journey afforded him. His lordship was more than enthusiastic over the salutations he received along the road. The residents along the entire nine miles of roadway stood in their verandahs and lined the fences. The bishop's hat was scarcely on his head from the time he left Avlmer until he arrived at the Ingram home The manifest interest of the people in him delighted the bishop, and again he expressed his appreciation.

On the way he asked Mr. Christopherser to take notes. He also desired that the names of all the persons he had met be set down.
