

JOHNSON EQUALS ED. WALSH'S FEAT

Fanned 12 Men in the First
Game of the World Series.

Although several batting and fielding records were equalled or broken in the recent world's series between the Giants and the Senators, few pitching marks were tied or established. The only pitcher on either club to score two victories was Zachary of the Senators, who defeated the National League champions in the second and sixth games. This is one of the few world's series on record in which only one pitcher has been credited with two victories.

Four pitchers have won three games and lost none in one world's series since the annual classic of the diamond was established back in 1903. The first of these was Christy Mathewson of the Giants, who did the trick against the Philadelphia Athletics in 1905. The next was Babe Adams of the Pirates, who won three games and lost none in the series with the Tigers in 1909. In the following year Jack Coombs of the Athletics won three games and lost none in the series with the Cubs. The trick was not performed again until ten years later, when Stanley Coveleskie of the Indians did it against the Robins in the series of 1920.

The pitcher who has won the most world's series games is Chief Bender, formerly of the Athletics, who has a total of six victories for the four series in which he has participated. He won one game against the Giants in 1905, one against the Cubs in 1910, two against the Giants in 1911 and one in 1912, and once by the Braves in 1914. Mathewson was defeated twice by the Athletics in 1911, twice by the Red Sox in 1912 and once by the Athletics in 1913. Babe Marquardt, while pitching for the Giants, was beaten once by the Athletics in 1911 and once by the same team in 1913. While with the Robins he lost two games to the Red Sox in 1916 and one to the Indians in 1920. Joe Bush, who also shares this record, lost one game to the Braves while pitching for the Athletics in 1914. While with the Red Sox in 1918 he lost one game to the Cubs. While with the Yankees he lost two games to the Giants in 1922 and one more in 1923.

Jack Coombs, formerly of the Athletics and Robins, holds the unique record of having won five world's series games without losing any. While with the Philadelphia club he won three games from the Cubs in 1910 and one from the Giants in 1911. While with the Athletics he won one game from the Red Sox in 1912 and one from the Yankees in 1914.

The record for the highest number of innings pitched in one series is forty-four, and was established by Charles L. Phillips of the Brooklyn club against the Red Sox in the first world series, held in 1903. This mark was not even closely approached during the recent series. The highest number of innings pitched by one pitcher this year was twenty-four. This feat was done by Walter Johnson, who was charged with two defeats and credited with one victory, that coming in the final game.

Christy Mathewson holds the record for the highest number of innings pitched in all the world's series in which he has participated. His total is 1032-3. This total was compiled during the series of 1905, 1911, 1912 and 1913. Mathewson also holds the world's series record of having pitched twenty-seven innings without having a single run scored against him. This feat was done during the series of 1905 with the Athletics.

Ruth Holds Pitching Record.

The record for pitching the most innings without being scored against is held by Babe Ruth, now with the Yankees. While with the Red Sox, Ruth pitched thirteen scoreless innings against the Robins in 1916 and sixteen against the Cubs in 1918, giving him a total of twenty-nine.

The highest number of strikeouts by one pitcher in one series is 28. This record was made by Bill Dineen of the Red Sox in 1903. Walter Johnson, who made more strikeouts than any other pitcher in the recent series, had a total of 13 in the series. In this respect this year, each having made a total of ten.

Chief Bender holds the record for the most strikeouts during all the world's series in which he has taken part. The former star of the Athletics has made a total of 59 strikeouts. These were made in the series of 1905, 1910, 1911, 1912 and 1914.

When he fanned twelve of the Giants in the first game of the series this year, Johnson equaled a world's series record that had stood since 1906. It was established that year by Ed Walsh of the White Sox in the series with the Cubs, the first intricately world's series of history.

When Johnson gave a total of eleven bases on balls to the Giants this year, he fell three short of the record. While pitching for the Athletics against the Cubs in 1910, Jack Coombs gave a total of fourteen passes. Coombs also holds the world's series record for one game, having given nine in one of the contests against the Cubs in 1910.

The record for the most bases on balls given by a pitcher in all of the series in which he has taken part is held by Arthur Nehf of the Giants, who now has a total of thirty-one. Nehf also held the record of twenty-two before the start of the present series and he handed out a total of nine against the Senators. Nehf gave thirteen against the Yankees in 1921, three in 1922 and six in 1923.

Mays Tied Mark in 1921.

The record for pitching the most games in one series without giving a single base on balls is held by Charles L. Phillips of the Pirates and Carl Mays of the Yankees. Phillips established the record against the Red Sox in 1903, while Mays duplicated the feat against the Giants in 1921.

The record for wild pitches by one pitcher in one series is three. This mark was made by Jeff Touseau of the Giants against the Red Sox in 1912. During this year's series only three wild pitches were made altogether, these being charged to Johnson, Marberry and Barnes.

In one series is three. This mark was hung up by Bill Donovan of the Tigers in 1907. In this year's classic only two batters were hit by pitched balls, one by Marberry and the other by Johnson.

A total of seventeen pitchers took part in the world's series this year. Of these eight were members of the Senators, while nine performed for the Giants. Those who pitched for the Senators were Johnson, Zachary, Marberry, Russell, Martins, Speer, Morigra and Ogden, while those who performed for the National League champions were Nehf, Bentley, McQuillan, Ryan, Johnson, Watson, Barnes, Baldwin and Dean. Altogether forty-two players, equally divided between the two clubs, actually took part in at least one of the games. Six members of the Senators took part in every game, while seven members of the Giants participated in some part of every contest.

FORMER PUGILIST
FATALLY WOUNDED

Stumbled From N. Y. Tenement and Fell at Patrolman's Feet.

New York, Oct. 31.—Shot and mortally wounded in his apartment at 124 West 20th street, shortly after 8 o'clock Wednesday, "Crooked-neck" Jack O'Brien, a former pugilist, staggered from the house to slump at the bottom of the street steps in front of Patrolmen Phillip Dunne and Joseph Lamm. He died before the arrival of an ambulance from New York Hospital.

Hundreds of young women employees of nearby loft concerns were pouring through the streets a few minutes after 8 o'clock when four shots cracked off, sending Jack O'Brien to the sidewalk. There were a few screams, a hundred curious gazes, and as nothing more happened those nearest the scene shrugged and went on.

It was several minutes later that the two policemen passed the house, the sole tenant in the block. A man whom they at first thought drunk staggered down the stairs and fell at their feet on the sidewalk. Dunne stopped to lift him, grasped him under the arms and found his hands covered with blood. Quickly propping the injured man against the stoop, the patrolmen drew their revolvers and looked inside.

The door leading into a first floor apartment was open. Their weapons ready, the policemen rushed in, only to find it deserted. A trail of blood led through the door and down the steps, to end at the huddled body on the sidewalk. One of the rooms of the apartment was in disorder, and there were several bottles and used glasses about.

An ambulance was summoned from New York Hospital and Dr. Charlton found the man had been shot twice in the back, one shot passing near his heart.

According to the police, who made a thorough search of the premises, the apartment apparently was run as a speakeasy by O'Brien. There was a beer-pumpkin device in one of the kitchen tubs, and they found whiskey and other liquor in the apartment, they said, during the search. A trail of blood led through the door and down the steps, to end at the huddled body on the sidewalk. One of the rooms of the apartment was in disorder, and there were several bottles and used glasses about.

AUTOMOBILES COLLIDE.
Yesterday afternoon about 8:45 o'clock quite a quick action of Matthew T. Morris, of 85 Winter street, in applying the brakes to his automobile, prevented a serious accident in Market Square, when a young man from Westfield with a Ford car made a direct turn in front of the Morris car. Mr. Morris brought his car almost to a stop when the Westfield driver collided and kept on going only to stop in front of the Horton establishment. The Westfield man acknowledged that he was at fault and promised to pay for the damage to the front mud guard on the left side of the Morris car.

The Winter Oil

Loil-Oak-Oil

Hundreds of motorists were given a free fill of Loil-Oak-Oil yesterday. If the producers of this lubricant didn't know for sure that they would take no other thereafter, there would have been no free party.

Motorists yesterday caught on to the fact that here is the only cold test Pennsylvania Oil produced—that no independent expert denies that Pennsylvania Oil is the highest grade in the world. Those motorists will learn a lot more to make them glad they filled up on Loil-Oak-Oil. Especially on cold mornings. Loil-Oak-Oil works as well in ten below zero as eighty above. Burnt on a piece of paper it shows no carbon or gummy residue and is therefore clearly the oil for winter weather.
