Emmerich is professor of hygiene and bacteriology in Munich University. He has eaten queerer things than chalk. In 1895 Abdul Hamid brought him to Constantinople to study the cholera, and Emmerich ate several thousand cholera bacilli and incoulated his blood with other germs. He survived the ordeal, and now claims that while eating cholera germs is merely harmless, the daily germs is merely harmless, the daily consumption of a sprinkling of chalk consumption of a sprinkling of chalk is curative and invigorating.

Emmerish and Loow have just concluded a series of experiments to test the influence of calcium chloride on the human body and the bodies of animals. They soon discovered that by feeding young animals on calcium chloride their growth and weight may be amasingly increased. Their first important experiment was with a litter of piglets. They divided the litter in two. In feeding one half of the litter they added to the food one gramme of calcium chloride for every kilogramme of the piglet's weight. That is, they gave to each piglet once a day a thousandth of its weight in calcium chloride. The other piglets were fed with exactly the same food as were the bechalked piglets, but they got no chalk. After seven weeks both batches were weighed. The piglets which had been chalked up were found to have increased by 155 per cent., and their rivals by only 75 per cent. cent.

From this Emmerich and Loew conclude that the normal food given to animals and man does not contain enough lime. So they have made experiments with an alling baby which had been putting on weight very slowly. Considerable quantities of calcium chloride were added to the infant's food every alternate week, and the weight each week minutely recorded. It was found that in the weeks when calcium chloride was eaten the rate it was found that in the weeks when calcium chloride was eaten the rate of growth was one-third greater than in the weeks when ordinary food was given. Thereupon calcium chloride was administered with food every week, and the infant grew more than noramily big, strong, and animated. In the need of the animal body for the three is wething new. The nevel. lime there is nothing new. The novelty was in feeding animals with the chemical in an organic state. German military scientists show that districts with water rich in lime salts supply a larger proportion of conscripts than districts with soft water. Carnivorous animals eat the bones of their victims merely because meat contains very little lime and they are driven by instinct to seek a supply of lime in the lime-rich bones. The same instinct impels domestic fowls to peck at stucco walls. Lime is normally found in large quantities in bones, lungs, and grey substance of the lime there is nothing new. Wants Divorce From Priest.

An extraordinary case has just been heard by Mr. Justice Bucknill in the Divorce Division. It was a suit for nullity of marriage brought by a young girl against her husband, a Koman Catholic priest. Previous to going into the matter the judge, owing to the recent decision as to hearing cases in camera, intimated that all persons who were not directly interested in the proceedings should leave the court. Most of those present accordingly went outside. The petitioner was Annie Rosetta Fortemps, otherwise Goodwill, and the respondent was Louis Portemps.

He made love to the girl, and she had to complain to the people at the school with reference to it. After the petitioner left the school on November 27, 1909, she and the respondent went through a ceremony of marriage at the Lambéth Registry Office. The petitioner was then 19, but the marriage, it was alleged, was never consummated. At Windsor the respondent passed off the lady as his ward. OWNS BROAD ACRES. New Duke of Sutherland Inherits An A goodly inheritance is that which tether, the fourth Duke, who died recently.

Close upon a million and a half acres of land, and an income of nearly $750,000 a year, is the total of the riches and the estate which the young Duke inherits. In addition he becomes owner of five country mansions in Scotland and three in England. With one exception, of the Caur of Russia, he owns more land than any other person in Europe.

The secret of this immense wealth lies in the fact that the Gowers have always married money. Originally they were a simple Yorkshire family of good lineage. The creat baronet, however, Sir Thomas Gowers married the heiress of the Stafford Lovesons, and acquired Lillieshall with its soal fields and the great estate of Touth ham.

The fourth baronet married lady Jane Granville, one of the co-heirasses of the Earl of Bath, and his son was created Lord Gower and married into the ducal house of Butland. The second Lord Gower was raised to an earlocasion to a lady better fortuned than her predecessor, while the second carl in the next generation did even better for himself, for he wedded the heiress of Scrop, first Duke of Bridgewater, and the great Bridgwater catates in Lancashire afterwards fell to his grandson.

While, however, the Gowers have thus linked wealth and matrimony, they have always shown keen business instinct, and the late Duke was no exception. Eschewing society, he lived quietly in retirement, developing his already immense estates. He was an enthusiastic Imperialist, taking a great interest in Canada, and every year visited this country, purchasing thousands of acres of land in Alberta and British Columbia.

His marriage to the Duchess of Sutherland, who owns in her own right nearly 150,000 acres, was a veritable romance, while at the same time it added one more to the long list of wealthy marriages contracted by the Gowers.

The late Duke was thirty-three years of age, and one of the most notable matrimonial eatches in society, when, in 1884, he went on a visit to the Earl and Countees of Rosslyn. The day after his arrival he went to tee in the school room. There he saw the sixteen-year-old Lady Millisent St. Clair Erskine, a young girl as witty and intelligent as she was pretty.

"Happy the wooing that's not long a-dooing," proving true in this case, for on her seventeenth birthday, the girl became Marchioness of Stafford, and ultimately Duchess, of Sutherland when her husband succeeded to the title in 1892. King Edward and Queen Alexandra were at the wedding, the Duke of Fife being best man.

"The Amazing Duchess' is the title which has been applied to the Duchess of Sutherland. Who is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable celebrities of the day, not even excepting her half-sister, the Countess of Warwick. Like the latter, the Duchess has distinct Socialistic tendencies.

"Years ago," she said, in one of her characteristic speeches, during the course of which she alluded to the necessity for certain social reforms and her longing to live in a cottage, "when I came inexperienced and enthusiastic amongst you, you called me 'Meddlesome Milly.' As far as a miserable Duchess could be an agitator, I strove to be one. The day is coming," she continued, "when no one will be grateful for the crumbs that have fallen from the rich man's table, and it will ### MAILS OLOSE.

The trouble can be stopped now by rubbing on Nerviline—rub it in deeply over the spine, and then put on a Nerviline Forous Plaster. In these remedies you will find wonderful and quick relief. They will spare you from an attack of Lumbago, which is the outcome of negicoted pain in the back or side. The creamical British marksmanship is represented annually at the Bisley meeting, where volunteer soldiers from all parts of the country, and from the Colonies, shoot off for pride of place in the various competitiona; the greatest of which is, of course, the King's Prize, says London Ideas.

This is a time in which the question naturally arises: Is Britain doing as much as it should do to foster and emocurage the art of rifle shooting. The answer is in the negative.

"Teaching the young idea how to shoot?" is a phrase which has lost much of its practical significance, and it is astonishing (writes an Ideas investigator) that so many parents, who would be extremely annoyed if you called them unpatriots, object to their boys handling a rifle on the ground that it produces a desire to kill. As a matter of expediency and presention every boy ought to be made acquainted with fire-arms, or the chances are that he will, in his ignorance, one day kill himself. Bifle shooting is a sport just as football, crieket and tennis are sports, and thousands of youngsters could be trained annually through their own desire to excel as marksmen if they had greater facilities and more official encouragement. Other nations realize the value of marksmanship—why should not we'll in 1893 France provided instruction in rifle shooting for boys of ten years and upward in the primary schools. During 1908 she spent £20,000 for ammunition alone for schoolbey rifle clubs. The antional Union of Shooting Societies of France has something like 2,300 ascoiated societies, with a total membership of 300,000.

Canada insists upon a course of markmanship as part of her public schools are the proud possessors of cadet corps, the total membership being 40,000, which is supplied with arms, ammunition and instruction by the Government allows over £40,000 for civilian riflemen, and riflemen, and riflemen, and riflemen in 1911. Every year the Government allows over £40,000 for civilian riflemen and less than 2,800 rifle ranges, and 3,600 shooting societies CENTRAL Academa Fruit Store, cor. Barrington and Salter Streets. H. Morley, in Yorkshire, was en fete recently, when Mr. Asquith visited it to receive the freedom of his native town. Yorkshire, Mr. Asquith once declared, had produced men in every walk of life who had contributed in a greater degree than the people of any other county in England to the making of history and the service of mankind; and, however this may be, none will be disposed to deny that Mr. Asquith himself is a worthy in species tracking of his county. Motor Power From the Sun. Charles Dickens called the sun "our ervant of all work"; and, indeed, all ower is derived from the sun, though power is derived from the sun, though we sometimes forget it, since it comes indirectly. The sun-motor is a successful attempt to obtain power direct from the sun. In the tropies much of the heat of the sun, especially in the sandy deserts, is never used at all, and it has been calculated that the sun's rays on one square foot of the earth's surface can produce one-third of a horse power. The question men have racked their brains to solve is how to collect this energy. hergy.
