Palmer went to the heart of the whole subject, when in a brief speech he showed that the arrangement between the Government and the contractors were not yet concluded, and final judgment could not be pronounced till a final settlement had taken place; also that the whole public works of the Dominion would come to a stand still, if the Government were not allowed any discretionary powers, and could not exercise their judgment without waiting till Parliament met. It is now generally considered that Mr. Mac-Kenzie made a great mistake in bringing up this subject as a

What is the conclusion of the whole matter? Section 5 is ready for the rails, at a less cost than that originally estimated by the engineers, and the Opposition have added another to the rapidly lengthening list of their defeats.

There are more in store for them. Mackenzie has several privilege questions to bring up. The Philosopher has the headland question to settle. Dorion has to find out whether Langevin interfered in the Quebec elections; while overshadowing all other questions is the proposed of the Freshet Current abates.

Further notice will be given when the Buoy is replaced in proper po ition.

THE WASHINGTON TREATY furnished Mr. Blake with material for series of "Resolutions," which he moved a few evenings ago, in virtual censure of both the Canadian and British Governments. The pill was sugar-coated with a resolution "that in future no rights of Canada should be yielded without her consent"; but the sugar could not be separated from the pill, and both had to share the same fate. Blake first rather coaxed the House to swallow it, and argued that it would do them good and prevent sickness in the future.

Dr. Tupper said the medicine was very bad. It would make the Government
