

Library of Modern Progress

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF HUMAN PROGRESS AND DEVELOPMENT

In Twenty-six Volumes

By Eminent Writers of World-Wide Reputation, including Justin McCarthy, the Famous Historian; J. Arthur Thomson, Professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen; Rear-Admiral Francis S. Higginson, of the U.S. Navy; George McCall Theal, Historiographer to the Cape Government; J. R. Klemm, of the United States Bureau of Education; Professor Oscar Browning, of Cambridge University; W. P. Trent, Professor of English Literature, Columbia University; William Sharp, the Famous Art Critic; Charles G. D. Roberts, the Celebrated Litterateur; H. de Beltgens Gibbins, the well-known writer on Industrial Questions, and Oxford Prize Man in Economics; Sir Richard Temple, the Distinguished Diplomat and Oriental Scholar; John G. Woolley, the Social Reformer and Writer; Sir Nathaniel Barnaby, for many years Chief Naval Architect to the British Admiralty; W. H. Doolittle, Formerly Assistant Commissioner of Patents to the United States Government; W. H. Withrow, the versatile Editor and Author, and other equally distinguished authorities.

NO MODERN LIBRARY IS COMPLETE WITHOUT THIS WORK.

The work is as entertaining as any romance. It answers every question of the scholar and the man of affairs.

As a Work of Reference it is much superior to the ordinary alphabetical encyclopædia, because each department of knowledge has a volume to itself.

Its system of indexing is original, and is so perfect that the record of any event or subject can be located in a moment.

Its Chronological Index gives the record of each year for one hundred years, and an outline record of many centuries.

By means of the Analytical Index any subject in any of the volumes is immediately available.