PRESENTATION.

Miss Margaret McIsaac, teacher of of S. S. No. 4, Raleigh and Harwich, was very pleasantly surprised last Friday evening, when her pupils, to show, in a tangible way their personal love for her and their appreciation of her services, met at her it is only by curing boarding house, and after an enjoyable evening of magic lantern views, games, etc., presented her with a beautiful lamp and photograph album and the following address:

Miss McIsaac, Dear Teacher,-We had planned this little surprise party for you, thinking you were going to remain another year with us, and only yesterday we learned of your decision to change your place of teaching,

Our pleasure has been turned into sorrow, for we have all learned to love you dearly, both as teacher and as a friend.

In looking back over the past three and a half years you have been amongst us, it must be a source of pleasure and pride to view the changes that have been made in our neighborhood, and we, your scholars, are happy in the thought that our teacher took such an active interest in helping to bring about these changes.

The new brick school house we are enjoying, has to a certain extent been the outgrowth of your untiring zeal, and the determined purpose in that way, inspiring those with whom you came in contact, until the object desired was obtained.

Again, the concerts you have given, have always had something in them to lead us in a better way of living, and impressions made in childhood are stamped there for life.

The funds from these concerts you have used wisely and well; not only for beautifying our school home, but placing within our reach a splendid ibrary, well stored with books, for pleasure and knowledge: we would not forget our curiosity collections, these you have aroused dormant, feelings to study nature in all her beauty, glory and wonder.

In presenting you, dear teacher, with this lamp and album, we only try, in a small way, to show our love and appreciation for you. May you live long to enjoy the light from this lamp, and may it recall many pleasant memories of you loving scholars of S, Signed in behalf of the school, Edith Thompson, during her stay among them. She expressed sorrow at severing ections with them, whom she had learned to love so dearly and whose welfare had been for the last three years her chief object, and she hoped the future might be bright and happy for one and all, and said that their gifts would be lovingly treasured by her and would recall the many pleasant memories associated with S. AN EASY WAY

To Keep Well,

It is easy to keep well if we would only observe each day a few simple rules of health. The all important thing is to keep the stomach right and to do this it is not necessary to diet or to follow a set rule or bill of fare. Such pampering simply makes a capricious ap-petite and a feeling that certain favorite articles of food must be a voided. Prof. Wiechold gives pretty good advice on this subject, he says: "I am 68 years old and have never had a serious illness, and at the same time my life has been largely an indoor one, but I early discovered that the way to keep healthy was J. R. Graham notified the council that the way to keep healthy was that he would hold the Township to keep healthy/stomach, not by eating bran crackers or dieting of any sort; on the contrary I always what my appetite craves, but daily for the past eight years I have made it a practice to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal and I attribute my robust health for a man of my age to the regular daily use of Stuart's

Tablets. My physician first advised me to use them because he said they were perfectly harmless and were not a secret patent medicine, but contained only the natural digestives, peptones and diastase, and after using them a few weeks I have never ceased to thank him for his advice. I honestly believe the habit of taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after meals is the real health habit, because their use brings health to the sick and ailing and preserves health to the well and strong."

Men and women past fifty years of age need a safe digestive after meals to insure a perfect digestion and to ward off disease, and the safest, best known and most widely used is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

They are found in every well regulated household from Maine to California and in Great Britain and Australia are rapidly pushing their way into popular favor. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, full sized pkgs. at 50 cents, and for a weak stomach a fifty cent package will often do fifty dollars worth of good.

WIDOW

Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson

By GEORGE M. BRISBANE

 Perkins of Ohio was an old man, a lame man and a decidedly homely man, but he had a shrewd head and a mint of money. He brought his mint of money to the Pennsylvania oilfields with the intention of increasing it to two mints. Incidentally he met Widow Stebbins.

Widow Stebbins lived in the center of the oil belt on a farm of twenty-one acres. Fifty years old, with a face that would stop a clock, she had been a widow for fifteen years. She had done her best to secure husband No. 2, but every man in the surrounding counties had fought shy of what they termed the homeliest and the talkiest woman in all Pennsylvania. But when oil was struck Widow Stebbins became the center of masculine interest. The valuation of her farm kited up into the thousands, and she determined to kill two birds with one stone. She would acquire riches and a husband at the same time. She caimly announced that her farm, for which she had been offered $50,000, was neither for sale nor to lease, but whoever married her could do what he liked with the property. Every man who heard of this imagined he had the chance of a lifetime, but the widow be-of the color of their hair or the size of their feet. Perkins was among the first to offer his heart and hand to Widow Stebbins. Here was an opportunity that would not demand the investment of any of his treasured capital. The festive widow looked him over and pointcame more and more particular every day. She even refused men on account ed to the gate. "You can pass right on. I don't be lieve I'd have married you ten years ago, when I used to feel like goin' out in the fields an' sparkin' a scare-

Perkins swallowed his pride and offered her $100,000 cash for the farm, but again she laughed at him. Then, with righteous wrath blazing in his bosom, he rode back to town and called three of us young fellows into a conference. We were all single, and one of us was to be the victim. A cold blooded agreement was drawn up in black and white. Perkins was to furnish all the capital for us to make a good appearance before the widow, and the one who secured wife and farm was to divide profits with the remaining three. We drew lots, and 1 won. Perkins was liberal as to my outfit, even to the diamond stud and gold headed cane, and it was a pretty swell man who drove up to Widow Stebbins'

THE DOCTOR BROKE LOOSE AND PUNCHED OUR HEADS ALL ABOUND.

I had heard of Widow Stebbins, but had not yet seen her. At the first glance I stood ready to shed my finery and shovel dirt at 50 cents per day rather than marry her. Perhaps she read my feelings in my face, for she promptly placed her arms akimbo on the fence and informed me that I was knee sprung, nearsighted and empty headed. What I said in return was equally frank. My plain talk about her personal appearance rather tickled her sense of humor, and as I took my departure she called out that if she didn't and a man that suited her better withn a month she reckoned she'd drop me

Duggan went out next, and a handsomer fellow wasn't to be found in the oil belt. He was cordially welcomed and was beginning to feel like a man led out to execution when Widow Stebbins suddenly asked him if he could write poetry. On his replying that he could not she shook her head and said that she had decided to marry a poet. Duggan obligingly offered to learn, but she declared she couldn't wait. She wanted a full fledged poet, not one who was just experimenting in

"You see," she said, "when I was a young girl I started to write poetry an' had to give it up for the washtub. Seein' that I'm rich now, I'm goin' back to it, an' I want a husband that'll appreciate an' help me."

Our third man was a physician. The widow looked him over critically and asked: "Can you write poetry?"

"No, madam; I am a doctor." "Lawzee! You're the first doctor that's proposed. I'd like you to write poetry; but, then, I can do that, an' rheumatiz. Yes, I think you'll do." "But I thought you wanted a poet," groaned her suitor despairingly. "So I did, but I've changed my mind. A woman with my prospects in oil's got the right to change her mind as often as she likes. You can bring the preacher over as soon as you please."

The young doctor came back to us looking ten years older. It had been a fair and square agreement, but we could see that he wanted to throw us down. He was as poor as a church mouse, but the prospect of riches which we dangled before his eyes could not banish the memory of Widow Stebbins' face. Finally Perkins whispered to

"Lost his nerve. Have to be braced up. Champagne's the stuff." But that was where we made our mistake. The doctor was one of those chaps who grow ugly under the influence of the sparkling fluid. Just when we had him at the point where we could hear wedding bells and oil wells gushing simultaneously he broke loose, punched our heads all round, and the last news we got of him was that he had left Oil City in a wagon, with a black eye and a broken nose.

For a week we mourned and could not be comforted-that is, the younger men mourned. Old Perkins, who had invested the capital in the matrimonial enterprise, swore not softly, but often. At the end of that time we heard that Widow Stebbins had married a rgilroad conductor, who had won her out on the plea that she could travel on passes all over the world. That such a bait could win a woman who by the stroke of a pen could command millions is one of the inconsistencies of the sex generally and widows in particu-

Three days after their marriage the conductor had executed five leases, and the farm looked like a modern beehive. Then a strange thing happened and knocked out the husband, the geologists, the borers and all hands on the ground. Not a drop of oil was ever struck on that farm. They went down to sand rock and other kinds of rock, they bored and they torpedoed, but it was a dead loss. The oil basin seemed to have made an island of that farm. A year later it was offered to any man who would take it and pay the taxes.

I never heard whether the doctor learned of his narrow escape or whether the unfortunate railroad man hung himself in despair, but personally I have always been profoundly grateful to Widow Stebbins for pronouncing me knee sprung, nearsighted and empty headed.

Took Him at His Word.

Many anecdotes show that Indians have not been wanting in calculation and cunning in their dealings with white people. Indeed, the paleface, although superior in intelligence and education, is often obliged to look very sharp in order not to become the dupe of the crafty red man. In "The Deserts of North America" this anecdote is re-

An Indian, after hearing a preacher speak from the text, "Make vows to heaven and keep them," went up to the preacher after the sermon and "I have made a vow to go to your The minister was a little surprised,

This was also granted, but when, after supper, the Indian announced, "I have made a vow to sleep in your house," the minister began to fear that there would be no end to the vows of his attentive auditor. "That is easy to do, and you should keep your vow," he said. "I will give you a bed. But," he added, "I have made a vow that you shall leave tomorrow morning."

The Indian nodded. "Good!" he said. "You make my vows come true, so I make your vow come true." And the next morning he went away in good humor.

Early Rising. The excellence of early rising and its inspiring influence on both body and mind have been themes for the poet's song and the sage's sermon. Early rising promotes cheerfulness of temper, opens up new capacities of enjoyment and channels of delight to which the sluggard must be insensible.

It increases the sum of human existence by stealing from indolence hours that would else be utterly wasted, and, better still, unquestionably conduces to longevity. All long livers have been Now, the habit of retiring to bed at late hours will hardly admit of early rising; therefore the necessity of refraining from the one in order to secure the advantage of the other. From six to eight hours are generally held to be sufficient and no doubt on the average

Our sleep is regulated much by the season. In winter people lie longer on account, as they say, of its being too dark to get up early. There is some plausibility in the reason, but the system in cold and dark weather is more prone to sleep than in light and sunny times. Invalids need generally plenty of bed rest, and they should procure it by going early to bed.

There are more health and strength to be found in the practice of seeing the sun rise than in looking at it in any other part of the day.
