THE PLANET JUNIOR

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1907.

Boys! As you are probably organizing your athletic clubs of various kinds for the summer, we will be pleased to give you space in The Planet Junior for weekly reports of your sports. Commence by telling us the name of your club, the captain and members, and to what locality you belong. You might appoint one member to send us in regular reports of your practices, chal-lenges, matches, etc., so sure always to tell us who is the upstart, and let the writer sign his report. Try, boys, and see if your club cannot be as interesting to the sporting world as is the adult sporting news.

DRAUGHTS

The following is the solution to Problem No. 9 of local series: White — K to 10, M to 11, K to 15, and wins. Black — M to 19, M to 13. Problem No. 10—Local Series. Black.

RIDDLES

The old man who sells produce in the towns near Lowell, Massachusetts, has his share of the best kind of vice—the unscrupulous. Not long ago, according to a writer in the Lowell Citizen, he delivered a pair of dressed chickens, and climbed up to one of his customers. She was in the kitchen when she brought them in, and when he saw the headless fowls, he grew older; he became saucy and would have spanky because mother whipped him for chasing the little chickens, and climbed up to the top branches of a tall maple near the house. He did not come down when it got dark. We called him, but he made a low chattering noise and wouldn't stir a foot, so we went to cut off the heads of those innocent chickens, and he fled.

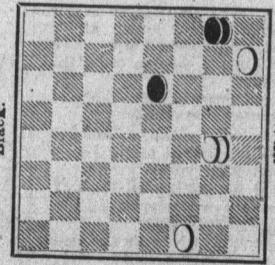

"I do," replied the old man, "and my throat stopped the cough, gave round."

"How?" the housewife demanded with eager interest. "The heads of these chickens are gone."

"Oh, yes," said the old man, cheerfully.

"I chopped the chickens off."

"I never tried, she coyly replied.
