A Love Charm, A young woman who thought she ras losing her husband's affection went to a seventh daughter of a seventh daughter for a love powder. The mystery woman told her: "Get a raw piece of beef, cut flat, about an inch thick. Slice an onion in two and rub the meat on both sides with it. Put on pepper and salt and toast it on each side over a red coal fire. Drop on it three lumps of butter and two sprigs of parsley and get him to eat it."

The young wife did so, and her husband loved her ever after.

Twould Spoil This Story to Tell it in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure ufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recom-mend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by All Druggists.

WELL AGAIN.

WELL AGAIN.

The many frends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain Balm cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monon, Ind.) had failed to give relief. MEETING

Barbara stood at the gate drinking Barbara stood at the gate drinking in the mountain air, which was like a draft of wine to her. The sun, hanging just above the crest of Bald Hill, had lifted the early morning fog and set the dew covered spider webs on the grass shimmering like so many clusters of crystals. Adown the road linnets and thrushes were chirping merrily in the woods, and occasionally the breeze wafted the scent of pines to her. The woods were calling her. She would not disregard such an invitation.

She ran lightly into the house and presently reappeared with a paraso thus, she started down the road, followed by her aunt's admonition to be back to dinner at noon and to remember not to cross the Johnsons' pasture, where rattlesnakes had been seen recently.

Barbara went briskly toward the woods with a feeling that on such a day it was indeed good to be alive. Well down the road she passed the great arched gateway of the sanitarium, and, looking up the steep driveway, she could see the buildings perched on the hill. She had not been down this road for ten years, but she suddenly remembered, with a little thrill of pity for its inmates, that the red brick building on the extreme left was the insane pavilion. She took the little footpath which led across the lower end of the sanitarium grounds and into the pine woods. She found a place where giant pines towered many feet skyward and pine needles. Here she sat down and listened for a time to the tinkle of a tiny brook hard by and the sighing of the breeze through the pine tops. She when the cracking of a twig warned her of some one's approach. She looked up. Before her, hat in hand, stood a handsome, well groomed young man, who regarded her with a steadiness of gaze decidedly disconcerting. As she looked up he bowed gravely.

"Good morning, Princess Louise," he said in a cheerful voice. "Really de-lightful morning, isn't it?"

Barbara's mouth curved scornfully. Then, all at once, the truth flashed upon her. This man before her was a strayed inmate of the insane pavilion. Her eyes opened wide in alarm and made her doubly charming—at least so sense of pity.

"Charming spot here," he went on easily. "Let me congratulate you on ensily. "Let me congratulate you on your choice."

Barbara's heart was beating wildly. The man might be dangerous, and she was at his mercy. She remembered she had heard somewhere it was best and safest to humor lunatics. So, smothering a desire to scream, she faced the intruder with as much composure as she could summon.
"I should very much like to sit down here with you," he was saying. "It isn't every one, you know, who is favored with a morning interview with Henry IV."

Isn't every one, you know, who is favored with a morning interview with Henry IV."

"Oh, yes," Barbara said breathlessly.
"Do sit down. I shall be very glad to have you sit down with me. Indeed, I'm awfully—awfully pleased to have you sit down."

He seated himself with a smile which in a sane person would have betokened unlimited patiences

"And what is Princess Louise doing this morning?" he asked.

"I'm—I was reading a book on birds, lir. Henry IV.," she said.

He glanced at her quizzically. "Do you mind if I feel your pulse, your highness?" he asked quite humbly.

"Oh, no, indeed not," she assured him, at the same time extending her wrist to him. He pulled out his watch and took her wrist lightly in his hand. Presently he dropped it and returned the watch to his pocket.

"Ah, thank you," he said as he drew a tablet from his pecket and began writing rapidly on one of the pages with a pencil. He laid the tablet aside, and as it lay on the ground near her Barbara read in the round, full hand on the page:

"And now, Princess Louise," the young man was saying, "I think we'd better seek the banquet hall." He rose and slipped the tablet and pencil into his pocket.
"I'm—it's very comfortable here," she said, and then as a forlorn hope she added, "but don't let me detain you." "But really I insist," he said, with well bred firmness. Barbara dared no longer hesitate "Henry IV." assisted her to her feet, and as she gained them he slipped her arm through his own. She felt his arm pinning hers firmly against his side and realized that opposition was useless. Together they started through the grove, and Barbara was surprised to find they took the path leading to the sanitarium. They gained the grounds and started up the hill toward the buildings, "Henry IV." meantime conversing pleasantly and Barbara answering him as best she could. She breathed more freely now, for she was sure they would soon encounter an at tendant, who would relieve her of her dressing Barbara's companion, they've just got her." "Who?" said the other quickly.

"The Tolman woman. Found her in the laundry," said the attendant. "Here they come now," he added, pointing to two men who led a struggling woman between them.

"Good Lord!" gasped the erstwhile "Henry IV." "Who have I got, then?"
"Then—then you're not insane?" said Barbara, giggling hysterically with this sudden removal of the tension.

"I wasn't an hour ago," he said, rubbing his forehead in a bewildered

"A woman named Tolman confined here escaped, as we supposed, this morning," he explained. "You are the image of her, which accounts for my actions in the grove. She thinks she's Princess Louise and everybody else is some other celebrity. Henry IV. fell my lot. I'm particularly interested in the case, and because I was won dering what effect the quiet of the woods would have I took your pulse and made those notes in the grove. It's a terribly absurd situation. I don't know how to apologize to you. I presume you thought me insane and tried to humor me." "Precisely," said Barbara, and they both laughed heartily. "At least, let me get my automobile and take you home," he said. "I presume you've had quite enough of the

"Thank you," said Barbara, "but it's only a step to where I am staying with my aunt, Mrs. Durgin." "Mrs. Durgin's!" said the doctor.
"Why, I spend half my evenings

Barbara lifted her downcast eyes and flushed becomingly.

"I suppose I should humor you, as I did once before, 'Henry IV,'" she said.

"I'm utterly uncontrollable when i," he laughed. "Then," sighed Barbara, "for the sake peace"— But at this point the sentence was interrupted.

William Sharam Tells of His Precarious Condition, and His Happy Release From it.

From it.

Murray Harbor South, P. E. I., Mar. 28.—(Special.)—William Sharam, who keeps a general store here, is one of many hundreds in Prince Edward Island who have been rescued from chronic sickness, and made sound and well by Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Sharam, who is always glad to say a word for the remedy that did so much for him, relates his experience as follows:—

"I sprained my back with heavy lifting, and the result was urinary and kidney trouble that left me in a very weak state, and at times I got so weak that I almost fainted, and could scarcely hold up.

"After trying several other medicines without relief, I concluded that it was as kidney Diesase I had, and would find the cure in a Kidney Pills.

"The result was all that could be asked. I used ten boxes all told, and can now enjoy sweet sleep without being disturbed as herectofore, and my old troubles were banished."

There is a fascination about big profits to a business man. But the conservative and cautious trader prefers to have the lesser per cent. of interest and the larger per cent. of safety in his investments. There is no business man who would not consider it a sound proposition to invest sider it a sound proposition to invest in an enterprise in which absolute loss was impossible and which offer-ed minety-eight chances in a hun-dred of a rich profit. The statistics of cures effected by Dr. Pierce's Goldon dealess effected by Private Stolic-en Medical Discovery show that nine-ty-eight per cent. of cases of "weak lungs" can be absolutely cured. Al-most if not aff forms of physical weakness may be traced to starvation. Starvation saps the strength. The body is just as much starved when the stomach cannot extract nutrition from the food it receives as when there is no food. "Weak lungs," bronchial affections, obstinate coughs, call for nourishment. "Golden Medi-cal Discovery" supplies that nourishment in its most condensed and as similable form.
