Drivers of Fifty Years-Weather-World Veterans Try to Get on the Pension Lists-Their Stories.

Euston road, London, the other day.

The vehicles were simply packed to suffocation by men quite as ancient as the drivers. They were so old that on alighting they did not hear shouted warning about the steps, because they were deaf, and they stumbled badly because they were half blind.

Also because some of them were crippled with rheumatism they could hardly crawl up the path to the front door. But they assisted each other with much kindness.

Now that sad little spectacle was not, as might be supposed, a "grandfathers' show." It was, as a matter of fact, a gathering of old cabmen at the Dr. Forbes Winslow's Hospital, where they hoped that the doctor's scrutiny of their

Deafness, failing eyesight, failing heart, rheumatism; and memories, too, were bad. Several of them, asked what the present year was, had to scratch their white heads before they could re-member. One old man, who had been driving a cab for fifty years, said, "My her? Is she pretty or is she rich? Jack-Both; she's pretty rich.-Pittsmind is that bad, sir, that sometimes I has to pull up, and, begging the fares, pardon, ask them where they told me A very wise man once said that when

After their examination, Dr. Forbes Winslow asked most of them how trade was, and all agreed it was not what it was when they began, forty or fifty years ago. And the police? Their weather-beaten, frost-bitten, purple old faces broke into a thousand wrinkles. Ah! they kept clear of them-if they

The Alternative.

The doctor had been called to see a pitman's wife. On coming down from her room the doctor said to the husband: "Well, Geordy, I'm glad to say there isn't very much wrong with your wife. It's a case of too much blood, put it on her, and I believe you'll find her better when I call in the morning." Next day the doctor called again and. meeting the husband, who was a bit of maa, "and I could not ill-treat a horse, sir, I could not." ARTIFICIAL EYES.

The First Ones Made Were Worn Outside the Socket. As early as 500 B. C. artificial eyes were made by the priests of Rome and Egypt, who practiced as physicians and surgeons. Their methods of eye making are thus described: On a strip of flesh tinted linen, two and a quarter by one and a quarter inches, the flat side of a piece of earthenware, modeled life size and painted to represent the human eye and eyelids, was cemented. This linen, coated on the other side with some adhesive substance, was placed over the eyehole and pressed down. In brief, the artificial eye was worn outside the socket and, though a clumsy substitute, was prob-Egyptians. In the ruins of Pompeii, destroyed in 79 A. D., an eye of this description was discovered.

Not until the sixteenth century do we hear of eyes at all like those of today-that is, worn inside the socket. A French surgeon, one Ambroise Pare, invented three artificial eyes. One consisted of an oval plate covered with soft leather, on which an eye was painted. It was attached to the head by a strong steel band. It could have been neither sightly nor comfortable. second device and the first known in history to be worn inside the socket consisted of a hollow globe of gold deftly enameled. The third eye devised by this ingenious gentleman was a shell pattern eye, much like that in use today, except that it was of gold and enamel.

Pare's inventions were followed by eyes of painted porcelains and colored pearl white, which became very pop-ular. They were succeeded by eyes of glass, which soon took the place of all others and command popular favor to this day.

Glass eyes were invented about the year 1579 and were crude productions of inferior workmanship, the iris and pupil being hand painted in a far from lifelike manner. Shakespeare mentions glass eyes in "King Lear," where the king advises the blinded traitor Gloucester to "get thee glass eyes and seem to see."

QUEER OLD RUSSIA.

The Firing of Moscow In the Time of Ivan the Terrible.

One who traveled through Russia in 1698 wrote in Latin an interesting ac count of what he saw. This was afterward translated into English in part as follows: "The Muscovites are gener ally of a very strong constitution, both very tall and bulky. Above one-half of the year is taken up with their fasts. when the common peopl. feed upon nothing else but cabbage and cucumbers, and these raw, only pickled." Giles Fletcher, an English traveler, saw Moscow fired by an army of Tartars in 1571 in the absence of Czar Ivan the Terrible. He writes, "There was nothing but whirlwinds and such a noise as though the heavens would have fallen." According to Fletcher, numerous persons were burned to death, while crowds struggling to escape from the flames met, and the ensuing crush resulted in thousands of fatalities. He asserts that "there perished at that time by the fire and the press the number of 800,000 people or more.' This estimate, of course, was excessive As a means of getting rid of the dead bodies, says Fletcher, the Czar Ivan ordered them on his return to thrown into the Moskva, and the corpses dammed the deep and rapid river and caused it to overflow its Sergeant Kelly, a celebrity of the Irish bar, had a remakable habit of drawing conclusions directly at variance with his premises and was consequently nicknamed "Counselor Therefore." Therefore I shall at once proceed to explain it to you ss minutely as possible."

A Mohammedan Custom.

The Mohammedans have the custom when they receive a present, of thank ing God first, then the giver. If you do them a favor they will say, "I thank God for your kindness to me." Some may comply rather thoughtlessly with this custom, which they have inherited from their fathers, but many certainly say it with their whole heart.
