"Do you think—would she marry me once? How dare I ask her? I haven't a penny——"

The door opened and Sylvia entered.
She had caught his last words only. She stopped short and looked at him. She was in evening dress, radiant, lovely, all that evening dress, radiant, lovely, all that man desires in woman. Who says he has not a penny?" she adoration.

"You forget!" she said. "Ah, Jack, you forget that you spent all when you bought me that night in Lorn Hope Camp!"

They were married. How trite, how hackneyed is the sentence! And yet h > much it means to a man and woman who loved as these two loved! They were married in Lynne Church, quite quietly, "as a sensible man ought to be, without any fuss!" as the viscount, who gave the bride away, declared. And one would be inclined to say that they were the happiest couple in Lynne, but that Audrey was present as bridesmaid, and Lorrimore as best man. Neville had sent him the wire the moment Sylvia had named the day.
"B," my best man," he said. "She," merning Audrey, "can't refuse to see yoa on our wedding day, and—well, weddings are as catching as measles."
As the happy pair were starting from the Grange on their wedding trip, and Sylvia had at last drawn her head into the carriage, from the window of which she had been craning to catch the last glimpse of the group on the steps, she turned to Neville, who was busy diging the rice out of his moustache and waistcoat, and with eyes over-brimming with happiness and laughter, said softly:
"Aren't you sorry I'm not Miss Mary

"Mary Brown?"
She clapped her hands.
"Oh, you heartless man! You have forgotten her!"

Then as she laughed and colored, she nestled up to him, and told him how sh; had suffered from the green eyed

"No!"
"Yes! And you never saw it. Ah, Jack, you were blind! They say that love is always all on one side," she added, with a little quiver of the lips. "Is it? Or do you love me a little, Jack? Are you glad you bought me with that nugget, or do you think it was not such a bad bargain, after all?" And though he said not a word, she was satisfied with his answer.

They had left Mercy at the Grange at her own desire; and Sylvia had left her better than could have been expected, and with the understanding that Mercy. and with the understanding that Mercy, as soon as she was strong enough, should follow her to Bury street. But should follow her to Bury street. But the did not do so. Instead of herself, there came a letter which Sylvia has shown to no one, not even to her husband, for in it, while telling her of her whereabouts, and her plaus for the future, Mercy had enjoined her to silence. "Let me pass out of your life, dear," she had written. "Even the sight of your dear face would only rouse the old pain and anguish. Do not even attempt to see me, for I think that I could not bear to see you; judge, then,how little able I am to meet any one who knows me and my history."
Sylvia understood, and obeyed the injunction. But she thought of her, even Sylvia understood, and obeyed the injunction. But she thought of her, even during the happy morn in which the newly married bride is supposed to think of no one but her husband.

They spent three months in wandering—almost hand in hand, certainly theart to heart—about the Continent, then returned to London, where their friends eagerly awaited them; and, as Audrey said, a second honeymoon be-

"You've come in time for all the best plays in the theatre," she said. "And mamma is going to have a dance—"
"And we are just going to serve a writ on the Right Hon. Sir Jordan!" put in the viscount. "I suppose you have been so wrapped up in your two sweet selves that you have forgotten all about your lawsuit."

Neville colored.
"Pon my word, that's about the truth!"

"Pon my word, that's about the truth!"

"I'm glad of that!" said Neville, heartily.

"Yes. The good fellow's delighted with his rise; but he's just as keen about this case as ever. He's in London 'working it up,' as he calls it; almost lives at the lawyers.' You'll be sure to see him to-morrow"

But they saw him that evening.
They were just going in to dinner, "the house party," as her ladyship called it, for Lorrimore was there, when he was announced.

"Whose head?" demanded the viscount.
"Sir Jordan's," said Trale.
"Jordan's!" Neville started. "Where—where is he? I must go!"
"At St. Thomas' Hospital," said Trale.
"I—I saw him fall. I was going to make a last appeal to him—to tell him that he couldn't win—"
His voice faltered.
"Go Neville!" murmured Sylvia, gent-

"Yes, yes. My hat," said Neville.

Trale put his hand on his arm.

"There's—there's no hurry. Sir Neville; he was dead when I left."

A thrill ran through the listeners at that "Sir."

"Dead," exclaimed Sylvia.

Neville stood speechless.

"Yes, my lady," said Trale to Sylvia.

"It was hopeless. He was conscious at the last, and knew those around him, but he only said one word. I've got a cab at the door, Sir Neville—' around him, but he only said one word. I've got a cab at the door, Sir Neville—

They were driven to the great hospital of which London has a right to be proud, and conducted to the silent room of death.

Neville stood beside the bed, and looked down at the still face from which the surgeon has drawn the covering.

Dead! It semed impossible.

"A terrible loss, Sir Nevile!" whispered the celebrated surgeon. "England will mourn one of her most brilliant statesmen. He would have been premier if he had lived. That was certain. It is terrible to think of. 'Yes, here lay the Right Hon. Sir Jordan Lynne, Bart... M.P.; the smooth voice silenced, the acute brain stopped, the ambitious spirit quenched—by a hansom cab!

"I—I was told he was conscious—that he spoke," Neville faltered, scarcely knowing what he said.

"Yes, he spoke just before the end," said the surgeon. "He spoke to the nurse, She was here a moment ago."

He beckoned, and a woman in a nurse's uniform came forward and stood with folded hands and bent head.

"Sir Neville would like to hear."

what his brother said, nurse, said the surgeon.

She looked up.

"Rachel, forgive!" she said.

Neville started.

"Mercy!" he said. "You—"

She looked at him, her sad face white and set, then with a slight shake of her head she moved away.

Oh, irony of fate! The great and powerful Sir Jordan had come, crushed, helpless, to die in the arms of the woman he had betrayed!

ROOSEVELT WILL CONTINUE HIS CAMPAIGN AGAINST THEM.

Declares at Nashville That for the Re maining Sixteen Months of His Term He Will Persevere Unswervingly in Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 22 .- Speaking n the Railway Auditorium here today, President' Roosevelt reaffirmed his intention of keeping up his campaign against the holders of ill-got ten wealth.

"There has been trouble in "There has been trouble in the stock market and in the high financial world during the past few months." he said. "The statement has frequently been made that the policies for which I stand, legislative and executive, are responsible for that trouble. These policies of man can be summed up in one brief sentence. They represent the effort opunish successful dishonesty. I doubt if these policies have had any material effect in bringing about the present trouble, but if they have it will not alter in the slightest degree any determination that for the remaining sixteen months of my term these policies shall be persevered in unswervingly. I will permit neither the demagogue upon one side nor the reactionary on the other to drive me away from the course or policy which I regard as most vital for the well-being of this nation.

"I will stand against the poor man if he does wrong just as I will stand against the rich man if he does wrong. I will stand against crimes of brutal violence just as I stand against crimes of unscrupulous cunning. A crime is a crime, and it makes no difference whether the Neville colored.

"Pon my word, that's about the truth!" he said.
"Ah, well. I haven't!" said the viscount. "I've been hard at work. It's going to be a tough fight, I can tell you. Jordan is game to the backbone. Did you read his speech in the House last night?"
"No." grunted Neville. "I read one once, and one will do for me."
"I't was splendid. It was indeed!" said the viscount. "He's a wonderful man; it's a pity he's such a vil—I—I—mean—" Neville turned away.
"I'm not sure he won't beat us yet," went on Lord Marlow. "My man—I mean the lawyer—says that, anyhow. Jordan can keep up at it for months, parhaps years. You see, he's everything, the estates, the money, his great name, at his back. Who'd believe such things of him as we shall charge him with?" They sound incredible! And he shows not an inch of white feather; a regular ovation in the House last night, they tell me, and Jordan calm and composed—as Pitt himself. A wonderful man! If it wasn't that we've got Trale on our side—and, by the way, I've managed teget our friend promoted. His fortune's made."
"Yes, The good fellow's delighted with his rise; but he's just as keen about this case as ever, He's in London 'working it up,' as he calls it; almost lives at the lawyers. You'll be sure to see him to-morrow" for Lorrimore was there, when he was announced.

He came jul ooking rather pale and evidently agitated, and the viscount at once jumped to the conclusion that something had gone wrong with "the case."

"What is it, Trale?" he said.

Neville shook his hand.

"How do you do, Trale?" he said.

"What's happened? How are you!"

And he shook the honest hand in his frank, genial manner.

Trale opened his lips twice before a sound would come; then he stammered:

"There's—there's been an accident."

"An accident!"

"Yes. He was leaving the House to go to dinner, and—and—a cab coming across the bridge knocked him down—and—("d—the wheel went over his head—""

The Modern Country Store.

"The country storekeeper has fewer bad accounts on his books than he carried some years ago," said James A. Chambers, of Coffee, Mo. "This is because he sells at a smaller profit and on a cash basis. It was not so many years ago that he had to carry accounts for some pretty well-to-do farmers for six months at a time.

"The reason for this changed condition is largely due to the high prices and large demand for poultry and eggs. I pay out to one farmer for poultry and eggs enough money every month to pay all his grocery bills and many other current expenses. Another farmer receives as much as $50 a month from me for chickens and eggs. The farmers are raising more chickens now than ever beffee, and they are getting the highest piles for them. The poultry products of the ordinary farm now amount to about as much in value as the live stock or any other kind of farm product."—Washington Post.

How the Artist's Model "Happens."

Most of our models are not made; they just happen. Girls in most cases of breeding and intelligence, want to make a little money for some special occasion. Some acquaintance recognizes that they have distinction and style and gives them the address of some illustrator who happens to need just such a person. They pose once in this way, more or less from necessity, find they can make an independent living in a congenial manner, and so come again. In consequence the women who pose for a livelihood in New York are exceedingly nice as a class. The prevalent idea that the words "artist's model" necessarily means a highly paid, greatly petted, and utterly deprayed individual is ridiculous in the extreme. A first class artist's model in New York City receives three dollars a day for six hours' hard work. A photographic model has, of course, a different proposition. She has shorter hours and higher rates.—From "Being a Model," by Charles F. Peters in the Bohemian for October.

In making conversation quantity seems to count for more than quality. How the Artist's Model "Happens."
