THE PELLAGRA.

AN INQUIRY STARTED BY DOCTORS IN THE SOUTH.

Suspicion That There May Be Hidden Cases of the Malady—Indications That It Has Its Origin in Corn—Deductions From Known Cases Up to Date.

New Orleans.—The physicians of Meridian, Miss., have started a movement to bring before the medical profession in every county of the state the fact that pellagra, the fatal disease supposed to be due to eating musty or mouldy corn, prevails in Mississippi and seems to be increasing. Their purpose is to discover the supposed hidden cases of pellagra, probably under treatment as eczema or other maladies, to collect as many facts about it—and particularly its origin—as possible, and by concerted action to get from the State Legislature a law in regard to the inspection of all grain shipped into the State if investigation shows the correctness of the Italian theory that pellagra is due to corn fungus.

The United States Marine Hospital service has already taken up the matter, and has sent out a great deal of information about pellagra. This has caused no little alarm, and it is probable that many cases of false pellagra will be reported. It is feared, too, that the general statement that eating mouldy or musty corn is the cause of the disease will form.

In the form of cornmeal or grits or hominy corn is much more used in the South than in any other part of the country, and is the staple article of diet for the great majority of the population. Morever, because of the boll weevil the Southwestern States are planting more corn this year than ever. Louisiana will double its crops as compared with last year and produce forty instead of twenty million bushels, and Mississippi will nearly double its crop. Any pellagra scare that aroused a prejudice against corn as food would be a serious blow to the farmers, who have been congratulating themselves on their success in substituting this food crop for cotton, and in thus raising their own supplies.

Meridian is one of the best points from which to start the movement, for it was there that the first definite case of pellagra was traced to the South. Then, too, Meridian has treated more cases of pellagra than any other city. Twenty-one cases have been brought to its hospital from the neighboring counties. Of the patients nine have died, while eleven still remain in the hospital. The disease was accidentally stumbled on less than a year ago. The first case was reported and treated as eczema. In the second case, reported in September of last year, the patient was a young woman of distinguished family, a daughter of ex-Justice Thomas H. Woods, of the Mississippi Supreme Court. She was treated by several physicians, and it was from that circumstance that the disease was finally diagnosed as pellagra. The existence of the malady was so little suspected in the country that few physicians had thought it worth while to inform themselves as to its characteristics, but when the case came to light investigation disclosed nearly twenty other victims in the same region. Here arises a puzzle: One disease is due to musty corn why are there thirty years to disclose itself? Why has it not appeared previously in the South and especially in Mexico, where the people have been living many on corn for a thousand or more years and on corn very carefully prepared, ground and stored?

It is noted as a coincidence that pellagra appeared in Mississippi with the coming into the agricultural districts of the State of the Italian, in whose land the disease originated and among whom it is most prevalent, and there is a suggestion that pellagrous Italians may have emigrated into this country. The disease was first reported in America in 1883, when a newly arrived Italian was found in a New York hospital suffering from it. There is no suggestion by the physicians that pellagra is contagious, although it was called at first "Lombardy fever," but the coincidence is arousing attention in Mississippi, where the Italian laborer is very unpopular in certain circles.

It is possible to make a porcelain inlay that will match the surrounding tooth so perfectly that except upon the closest inspection it is impossible to tell where the tooth leaves off and the inlay begins. Porcelain inlays, which are moulded into shape from the plastic material and then baked, may be set in grinding teeth, but this is not commonly done. A porcelain inlay that might not grind if it were in use might break in a grinding tooth in use and the inlay begins.

It is scarcely possible that the disease could have prevailed in this country any length of time and not have attracted attention. Its margins, its dark blotches, insanity and the certain death following it would unquestionably have caused investigation.

Again it is argued if there are twenty cases of pellagra in a little town like Meridian, there must either be some special cause for its prevalence there or what is more probable, the disease prevails elsewhere but under some different name. Meridian did not know the name pellagra a little over a year ago. The patients were all whites, and the natural suspicion arises that the negroes, who eat more corn and care less than the whites, take less care of it, know little about sanitation and seldom call in a doctor, may be concealing cases of the disease.

There is very little information on the subject of the first pellagrous person to enter the hospital at Meridian was a Mr. Freeman, of Macon, Miss., in October, 1907. It was a symptomatic case of pellagra, but the disease was not recognized, being mistaken for eczema. When hands dried up, it left that sunburn appearance which has given pellagra its name in Spain of the sun disease.

As the cold weather came on Freeman improved—another marked characteristic of pellagra, which gets better in cold weather and cannot exist in the tropics. He went home. Last September, he came to Meridian in a more violent form and returned in a brain. He suffered from insomnia; his mind became disordered, and he died in much suffering. It was about the same time that the second case, that of Miss Sue Woods, was discovered, and the malady which has given pellagra its name was identified.

There was much in Freeman's story which shed light on the subject, and may cause some modifications in the opinions as to the origin of the pellagra. Freeman was 56 and had run a grist or corn-mill until five years before his death. He had lived almost exclusively on corn instead of wheat bread. It was almost daily at the mill and he carried around a pocketful of corn kernels, which he nibbled on from time to time as he thought it helped the heartburn from which he suffered. His case aroused a great deal of responsibility on the cause of the malady, but suggests at the same time the eruption that it may be due to raw or uncooked corn or meal as well as musty meal, or to too exclusive a corn diet in hot weather.

Freeman died about a year after the eruption appeared on him. In the case of the Harper child, living seven miles east of Meridian, one child, aged 4, died before the doctor could get there, while the other lived a few days. On the other hand, a Mrs. Pace, who died in January, 1909, aged 36, had been suffering for twenty-two years with what are now known as the symptoms of pellagra, including the eruption on the hands and face, erythema, etc.—and why this difference in the duration of the disease no one can explain.

In most of the cases the patients were brought to the hospital and to the attention of the physician too late to give any accurate account of their habits or the origin or first stages of the malady, several of them indeed being lunatics, a condition which frequently comes in pellagra. In those cases of which anything is known the corn theory of its origin is supported to this extent, that the victims were eaters largely or almost exclusively of corn or cornmeal.

But a striking difference is shown between Louisiana and Mississippi in the fact that in the former State most of the sufferers from pellagra found in the hospitals or asylums are negroes, while in Mississippi they are white. In the light of these differences and contradictions and of the doubts that have arisen as to the disease the necessity for an investigation will be recognized by all.

GIVES IT UP.

Buffalo Woman, It Is Said, Would Give Up Incubator Baby, But Detective Who Helped in Kidnapping Langishes in Jail.

Topeka, Kan., Aug. 30.—Mrs. Stella Barclay, of Buffalo, left for her home to-night, after giving a $6,000 bond to guarantee her appearance here on September 8th to undergo a preliminary hearing on the charge of kidnaping the famous incubator baby. While she is in the county attorney's office it is reported she said: "I will give Mrs. Bleakley a deed of adoption of the child now."

While she made no stipulation as to the terms under which she would give the baby back to Mrs. Bleakley, her attorneys have intimated to the prosecuting authorities that she would give up all right to the child and stipulate never to interfere with it again if Mrs. Bleakley would withdraw from the prosecution of Mrs. Barclay and Detective Gentry, who aided in the kidnaping.

Gentry is still in jail here, having been unable to furnish bail. He was arrested by Mrs. Barclay this morning. Both pleaded not guilty and their preliminary hearing was set for September 8th. The court-room was packed, but there was no demonstration of hostility against Mrs. Barclay.

The baby remains in the custody of the clerk of the juvenile court here.

IMMORAL TRADE.

VIGILANCE COMMITTEES ARE TO BE FORMED.

Moral and Social Reform Workers Will Act in Three Directions; Preventive, Redemptive, and Punitive—Seek to Inform and Educate.

Toronto, Aug. 31.—A committee of the Moral and Social Reform Council of Canada, at a meeting in the Secretary's office in the Confederation Life building, with representatives of the various sympathetic organizations in the city, devised the form and methods of organization and work for the suppression of the traffic in women, so far as Toronto's end of it is concerned. It is intended also to write to other cities throughout the Dominion, asking that a committee be appointed by each local Moral and Social Reform Council, to be known as the Social Purity Vigilance Committee.

The object of these committees will be to work for the suppression of the traffic in women for immoral purposes, each committee to have, in addition to the members of the local council, representatives of all the churches and sympathetic organizations, and to work along the following lines:

(1) Preventive—(a) By means of the press, the platform and the pulpit, and through special literature, to inform the public of the existence, the extent, and the methods of this traffic; (b) to encourage parents, educators, and physicians to give, in a prudent and delicate but perfectly frank way, proper education to the young people of both sexes as to the problems and perils, physical, mental, moral and social, of the sex question;

(c) travellers' aid work—to arrange for getting into touch with unchaperoned girls arriving at wharves and depots to protect them against the agents of this traffic.

(2) Redemptive—To arrange for the rescuing, reclaiming and caring for the victims of the traffic.

(3) Punitive—To work in co-operation with the authorities responsible for the administration of justice, to discover and bring to justice those who are engaged in the traffic, or who directly or indirectly profit by it.

This plan will be recommended to the Moral and Social Reform Council of Canada at its meeting to be held in this city next week, and by it to the local councils throughout the Dominion. Active steps will be taken to form these Vigilance Committees in all centres of any consequence. The Council of Canada will probably arrange for work on a broader basis.
