The Publishers of "The Canadian" beg to institute their intention to produce a thoroughly independent Newspaper, to be devoted to the general interests of Canada, and to the principles of rational Revone by the gradual adaption of the Institutions of the Country to the progressive improvement of its population.

Without arrogating to themselves exclusive pretensions to occupy a position superior to all Party interests or influences, they cannot refrain from expressing their conviction, that much of the usefulness and efficiency of the Newspaper Press is impaired by the bitterness of party spirrit, and by its reckless attachment to Governments or Oppositions, irrespective of their resiments of the several Courts with comments or Oppositions, irrespective of their resiments of Oppositions, irrespective of their resi support.

While "The Canadian" will engage fearles ly in the discussion of the great questions in Government, Policy, and general Improvement, which must constantly arouse the Public mind, its columns will, as far as may be consistent with free enquiry and discussion, studiously avoid the exhibition of personal or party rancor and invective, and will at all times cultivate a candid and temperate examination and elucidation of principles.

The belief that a Journal conducted with such views, and in such a spirit, is required by the increased intelligence and population of this locality, and of the country generally, has prompted the Pablishers to bazard the undertaking for the support of which they now appeal to the Public Is soliciting that, they avoid reference to the literary ability, which, at considerable premary risk, but with much confidence in its ment, they have secured; and in avowing some of the leading principles on which "The Cauadian" will be conducted, they pledge themselves must be will featerwise and of the Clercy they pledge themselves the leading principles on which "The Cauadian" will be conducted, they pledge themselves the leading principles on which "The Cauadian" will be conducted, they pledge themselves the leading principles on which "The Cauadian" will be conducted, they pledge themselves the leading principles on which "The Cauadian" will be proposes, with the speedy abolition and extinction of the Rectories.

Generally, "The Canadian" will be a warm and zealous friend to every measure having a tindency to promote the interests of labour, and to ameliorate the condition of mankind: and to produce harmony, good feeling, and fellowship among the different classers of society.

"The Canadian" will be placed under the immediate editorial management of Thomas MACQUENT. Esq., of the HURON SIGNAL; and will be printed on a large Imperial sheet, with new and handsome type, on Wednesday and Saturday of each week, at the Printing Office of ROBERTSON & HARRIS, the Publishers.
