the leading agriculturits. Occolors chould be measured in the fall also when plowed and afterwards a top dressing of manure placed around each tree so as to a rew the roots. Especially after a large yield of fruit when the tree is exhausted manure should be plowed down in the fall so as to supply sustainance next spring to make the usual growth of wood fruit will not become small and diseased, the tree is properly fed.

Hings.—Iwe farmises pay any ettention to the poultry, and yet if properly attended to they are a source of large profit. To warrant profitable results, hens should be fed and watered regularly, and a proportion of cooked food should be given. Excellent results will follow from feeding every thind day in winter and the cool weather of spring and fall with the following compound:—To three gallons of boiling water add one-half an ounce of common salt, a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper and four ounces of lard. Stir the mixture until the pepper has imparted considerable of its atrength to the water. Meantime the salt will have been dissolved and the lard melted. Then, while yet boiling hot, site in a meal made of cats and core ground locather in equal proporthe lard melted. Then, while yet boiling hot, stir in a meal made of cats and corn ground logether in equal proportions until a thick much is formed. Before feeding, taste to see that you have an overdose neither of salt nor pepper and to prevent the hene being imposed upon with a mixture not fit to be eaten, nor so hot with pepper that you could not awallow it.

mor we hot with papper that you could not swallow it.

Whereas Parding of Stock — Some miture on agricultural subjects assert that there is no immediate profit on winter-fattening stock, and the only profit is from the increased quantity of manure made thereby and its superior quality. This, they say, is considered by English farmers sufficient to defray the cost of feeding. They adduce farures to prove their assertion, than reducing it to the solution of an arithmetical problem. As animal is of a given weight when being put into the stall for fattening, and when fit for the shambles he has gained in weight so many pounds or stones. This additional weight barely pay for the food consumed in the fattening, and hence it appears that there is no profit other than the manure, against which is to be placed in secount the labor of feeding. But there is some thing do be reckoned more than the price of the additional pounds of meat. Those writers have overlooked, or at least they have not taken into account, the increase and salue of the whole acreass. In our have not taken into acc ed value of the whole car nome market well fattened beef sells readily at thirty to forty per cent. higher prices than it would if lean, and the difference in British markets is still higher. This profit we claim is made by fattening animals in addition to that from the manure, as fairly valued, to be equivalent to the food and labor. A mileh cow can be brought well through mileh oow can be brought well through the winter on good hay, without any other food, but the question arises—"Will ahe not do as well or better on hay of inferior quality, with the addition of roots that oast less to the farmer than any other provender?" We have had cattle kept in good, thriving condition throughout the winter on good straw, with two feeds of turnips daily. Cattle feeders assure us that a good-sized cow will eat twenty-five to thirty pounds of hay in winter when it is her oaly food. Straw is soldom treated by farmers as of much account. Roots, such as turnips and mangolds, produce from 600 to 1,000 bushels per acre, at he cost of the labor—asy $12 te $15
