Where this is done so much has been accomplished in the line of self-control that its influence extends to temper and habits of mind. Such persons are apt to be self-contained in all emergencies. A gentleman will be such under all A gentleman will be such under all provocation and amid all trials and tests. Hence children thus educated receive something more than polish. It is something to gracefully escort a lady to din-ner, or to maintain an agreeable conver-sation, or to show, at all times, the air of good breading; but the value of it all is the traits of mind that have been imparted. A clean person will feel clean, and one accustomed to politeness will naturcourtesy ranks among the first.

If mothe s and nurses who me n will show under their care could only know one half of the pain they inflict and the mischief they do under the guas a solicitous don estic doctoring, they would not readily forgive themselves. No i considerable proportion of the maladies of very young children are made, and therefore are needless. The e are faults of a fussy endeavour to treat diseases which have no existence, and to preserve health whice is only jeopardised by the measures taken to render it doubly assured.

How to Treat Sudden Wounds.

The subject of one of the lectures by briate the Society of instruction in First Aid to the Injured, delivered by Dr. D. L. Woodbridge, of New York, was "What to Do in Case of a Sudden Wound when politeness, and etiquette is as impor-tant at home as abroad. We distin-

Mints About Grafting

In grafting it should be berne in mind that the scions should be taken only from healthy trees, as any diseased con-dition of the scious will convey this unhealthiness to the new growth, and will actually affect the tree ever after, even if it should not cause its eventual destruction. The fruit grafted can only represent that of the parent tree, and when there is a falling off in size or quality it may be taken for granted that some-thing is wrong in the condition of the tree from which the scions are cut. In cutting the scions care should be taken one accustomed to politeness will naturally realize the elevation of fee ing that to do so before the sap has begun to do so before the sap has begun to move in the spring. In fact, to be sure of there being no mistake in this, it is better to cut them late in the fall or in mid winter, and tying each kind together, label and bury in the ground under a shed, from which much moisture is ex-May 15th, 1880. cluded.
