Should the by-law be carried, and the work of extension be proceeded with, the additional amount required to be raised yearly, for twenty years, would average about $1,400, which spread over the assessment of the town, as it stands this year, would be only about eight-tenths of a mill on only about eight-tenths of a mill on the dollar—so small an amount as would scarcely be felt by any rate-payer in the Town. The work most likely would not be proceeded with this season, so that an advantage would be gained in the certainty of contracts being entered into at lower figures than could be obtained now.

The Council having now done their The Council having now done their part, it rests with the ratepayers to say whether they approve or disapprove of the proposed extension. Is there a necessity for such an extension? Nine tenths of the people, in town admit that there is. Will this extention benefit us to the extent of the outlay? If judiciously and economically done, we have little doubt but it will, and afford such moreased accommodation as the noreased accommodation as the growing wants of the Town require, and which must be obtained sooner or later if we are to keep pace with its progress and requirements.

The Close of the Session.

Parliament was prorogued on Tuesday with the usual ceremonies, and the fruit of its labours is see in the hundred and nine bills which were assented to by the Governor General. The session lasted only two months, but into that short period was crowded a vast amount of ork, and members can go back to their constituents and honestly say that they did not triffe away their time that there was very little unneces sary talking, and that nearly every measure promised by the Govern ment has become law. Much of this is due to the ability of the different members of the Government, to the promptness with which they brought down all their measures, to their as-siduity in forwarding all public busi-ness, and to their excellent management of the House in having it carried through

Of the total number of bills passed sixty are private and forty-nine public. The most important of the latter are the Pacific Railway bill; the new Election bill, providing for vote by ballot; the Controverted Elections bill; a measure for raising a loan of forty million dollars for canal and other public improvements; the new Tariff bill, a bill; to vest in the Public Works department the power of managing the Intercolonial by ballot; the Controverted Elections

Railway; a measure for the better administration of the North West Territories; besides others of lesser importance. The only measure of any consequence, promised by the Government, which was not passed, was the bill for amending the Insolvent Act of 1869. It was introduced too late in the session to be fully discussed, and we think it was wise policy on the part of the Government to delay it for another session, so that members and the business community may have full time to carefully consider its provisions.

It is needless to enter into the merits of the measures above mentioned. We have fully discussed these from time to time as they came up for consideration. Suffice to say that their acceptance by the House, and the general approval they have met with in the country, is the best evidence of their suitability to our wants, and for the development of the resources of the Dominion. By the reckless legislation of the old Government the present Administration were placed in a most difficult position. But they have shown they were equal to the emergency, and by their ability, close attention to business, wise foresight and excellent judgment in legislation, administrative talent, adherence to principle, and honesty in carrying it out, they have fully realized the hopes and expectations of their friends, disappointed and outwitted their opponents, greatly strengthened their position in Parliament, and secured a larger measure of confidence throughout the country.
