Brindisi in order to escape the censor: weeks ago he declared everything was prepared for war. But until the beginning of the fighting no preparations were made to resist a possible invasion of Thessaly. A few trenches were dug in front of Larissa, and one or two earthworks were erected. But ten days ago (the date the dispatch eft Athens is not given) not a spade had been used to erect batteries or arthworks to defend the exits of the half-dozen passes leading to the Thessalian plains. All the preparations made were to invade Macedonia, but even those were HOPELESSLY INADEQUATE. A military expert who made a tour of the centers where serious preparations might have been expected, says that in one arsenal, commanded by a colonel of artillery, there were less than fifty cases of shells, and only one field and one mountain battery. The arsenal for supplying ammunition to the army in Thessaly had only a reserve of twelve that their motto remained "Annexahundred rounds of shells and a few hundred cases of cartridges.
