The Manufacturers' League situation is acknowledged to be somewhat different than the Inter-Club League faced, and with a lot more angles attached. The general belief is that the Manus facturers are more than willing to agree on the draft as it affects pitchers and catchers, but they can see nothing more or less than a smoking, smoldering ruin of a perfectly good baseball league if a general raid is made and players are carried off who occupy other places on the team. Those in close touch with sentiment throughout the Manufacturers' League claim that many of the firms have ethically spent much money in promoting sports when teams to represent the city were not forthcoming, and there was a demand for local leagues and teams, but that the bogey of lost jobs over not playing for the firm is not so fearful as some believe. Many are also willing to admit that possibly the Manufacturers' League would be a still better attraction than ever with some

Down the Line In All Sports

The amateur baseball situation has resolved itself into rather a simple proposition. Boiled down, it comes to whether London ought to take its place alongside of other cities in community spirit in sport by having representative teams in all fields, and all firms, clubs and fans should put their shoulders to the wheel and bring this change about, or whether a situation which has gone on for some years and has brought real amateurism to a farcical state in some instances should go on in a go-assituation which has gone on for some years and has brought real amateurism to a farcical state in some instances should go on in a go-assituation which has gone on for some years and has brought real amateurism to a farcical state in some instances should go on in a go-assituation which has gone on for some years and has brought real but lacrosse, a regular hot weather game, and the hotter the better, is hard to think about this sort of weather, and that is perhaps why the lacrosse sub-committee hasn't rolled up the assembled sleeves and got down to work.

It is hoped by the enthusiasts to bring back to sport the old spirit and the junior shield, which was which made it a real honor to play for the city team, when no effort or sacrifice was considered too great by athletes to realize that ambition. Once that has been accomplished, the old city against city, town against town rivalries will come back and a totally new and greater following fo that make it compulsory for all athletes baseball will be accomplished, helping every brand of game.

Much of this spirit was spoiled by private groups getting control of sports and starting the underground monthly check business, which made players $5 and $10 professionals, neither one thing or the other.
