e story is eminently local and familiar in its boundings. We have our local banks introd, the bank sports, the yacht club, a Govern House ball, a swell ball, probably in Strees and the inside of some of our best less. The sketch of the bachelors' quarters ling-street west, Tremaine Buildings, is acte to a dot and must be a transcript from al experience. Indeed, we much suspect when our citizens get the book into their at they will have bard work in restraining uselves from identifying most of the charms and localities. So that the local interest he book its sure to be strong and sustained.

The dramatic character of the book, the details of the robbery, trial and tragedy at the close we must leave to the reader. They are all strongly written.

Toronto society must read this book, which the bank clerks holds the mirror up to itself, the bank clerks must read it to see how they stand the rays of publicity, and the true yachtsman must read it for the clear and exact sketching of one of our nest sports. But when you do read it don't be too quick in
