The blood-stained government of Austria is tovoking the execration of mankind. Th Magyars, who entertain a thorough contemp for Austrian pusillanimity, hanc been quieted, less by Russian lead than Russian gold, as Georgey can testify. No less than thirteen Hungarian generals, who delivered themselves up at the close of the war, and induced their soldiers to lay down their arms, have been murdered under the guise of a courtmartial; and to make the tragedy display a suitable denoument, Geunt Battyany, Prime Minister of Hungary, has been shot under eircumstances which will forever make the Austrian name synonymous with cruelly, treachery, and dishonour. The death of this brave and accomplished nobleman records an incident as touching as any that the world of romance presents. To render his last hours as bitter as possible, and his end the most degrading, he was sentenced to a malefactor's instead of a soldier's death.
