CANADA FACES FIGHT FOR THE OPEN BIBLE

Archdeacon Madden Thinks Church of Rome is Taking Advantage of a Divided Protestantism.

In making a strong plea for Christian unity of the Protestant Churches, Ven. Archdeacon Madden, in his address last night in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Broadview-avenue, sounded a warning note regarding the invasion of Canada by the Church of Rome. Now, if ever, was the time for Protestants to take action to maintain the principles of the reformation in this country.

"You are face to face," he said "with an organized force which is attacking divided Protestantism and trying to get possession of a land that should be the pure gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. In Canada you are going to have a fight for the very foundation of the reformation."

The speaker noted that the British Empire began when her people laid aside the superstitions of the Church of Rome and stood for the open Bible and for civil and religious liberty.

The Bible is a book practically closed to the Roman Catholics," said the archdeacon. "They can receive a license from the priest to read the Bible, but in the Church of Rome it is a book of the priest, and not the book of the people."

Referring to the Catholic Church extension movement, he said that the Eucharistic Congress had aroused a great deal of enthusiasm and noted a conversation he had with a Catholic bishop, who, he said, believed his church was going to sweep the country. The archdeacon regretted that the lieutenant-governor of a Canadian province should, on a Sunday night, have entertained to a dinner the papal legate on the occasion of his visit to Winnipeg.

"Rome is not only a religious force," he said, "but a political force. Its opportunity lies in the divisions of Protestantism."

James Corby Dead. CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—While two brothers, Harry Corby, former member of the Canadian Parliament, and Charles Corby, wealthy real-estate dealer of Belleville, Ont., were rushing to his bedside, Jas. Corby died last night at St. Luke's Hospital. The two brothers reached the city just a few minutes after he passed away. Corby was associated in business in Belleville with his brothers. He came to Chicago a few weeks ago for treatment for a chronic disease.

Balfour Has Misgivings. LONDON, Oct. 5.—Arthur Balfour, leader of the opposition, concluding a speech at Edinburgh, referred to the subject of colonial preference. He looked forward, he said, with real misgivings to the meeting together of another colonial conference with the government, which would meet it with the same disregard and obstinacy as before. He looked forward, however, with increasing hope to the prospect of great reform in our fiscal system.

ED. JARDINE WITH GIRL LATE ON FATAL NIGHT

South side of the grand stand, and close to the picket fence. "Could it possibly have been earlier?" he was asked. "No, it could not have been any earlier," was the positive reply. Fifteen or twenty minutes later they were gone, witness said. The crowd was moving away, and he took notice that they were not alone. He added, just before the crowd started to disperse he saw Albert Jardine, a brother, with two women in a car.

What Little Girl Notified.

Mrs. Adam McDonald further testified the court by testifying that Edward Jardine and the Anderson girl were seen beside the fence outside the pavilion at five minutes to ten, as near as she could judge. A few minutes after the band stopped playing her little daughter Catherine and little Maggie Leonard came to her to go home. Both girls say they saw the young couple before they came to meet her. Catherine told her that Edward Jardine was resting his elbow on the picket fence, between the pavilion and the peanut stand. He was not looking at the girl, but she was looking up at his face.

Both Little Girls were Called by the Band.

Edward and Lizzie, as Mrs. McDonald had said. "You are sure," insisted Mr. Seager, and each answered a positive "yes." By way of fixing the hour the band had stopped playing, Capt. Alex. McLeod and his wife were called. Mrs. McLeod had asked her husband, when the music ceased, what time it was, and he had replied, "Ten minutes to 10."

Cut With Jackknife.

Dr. Sallow read the post-mortem report, which showed that the girl had died as a result of a three-inch gash from right to left of her throat, which was made by a large jackknife, from the nature of the initial back and at the back of the neck, apparently caused after death. Also, there were blood clots on the forehead, indicating that a blow or blows had been struck before death. Dr. Sallow and Gunn testified to the correctness of the report.

Another slight jibe in Edward Jardine's account of his movements on the momentous day was brought out during the examination of William Bringley, who ran the shooting gallery at Goderich exhibition. Bringley swore absolutely that Jardine paid for the shots he fired both afternoon and evening, whereas Jardine, at the previous session of the inquest, said he did not settle. Bringley further stated that Jardine was in his place between 8:30 and 9 p.m., which again contradicts Jardine's statement that he was home at 8:02. Witness said Jardine paid him 15 cents in the afternoon and 10 cents at night.

Women Heard Cries.

Evidence that cries were heard in the vicinity of the vacant house where in the body lay, was given by Mrs. Margaret Ross and Mrs. Daniel Buchanan. The latter lives three doors away. She declared that she was awakened from her sleep by hearing a man talking loudly. Then came a cry, followed by a man's laugh. Then there was some more loud talking and a weaker cry. She listened breathlessly, but heard nothing more. The sounds seemed to come from the southwest corner of the fair grounds, right opposite her house. This would be in the direction of the vacant house. Mrs. Buchanan had no way of fixing the time, but fancied it was about 10 o'clock. Mrs. Ross resides in the second house north of the vacant house. On second night of the fair she was awakened by a "pitiful, mournful cry." She thought it was a child at first, but as she thought of it, it seemed more like a woman's voice. It seemed to be on the road. It was between 1 and 2 a.m. The inquest resumes to-morrow at 10 a.m.

PORTUGAL HAS A PRESIDENT ALREADY

Britain and Portugal give the empire a direct interest in the outcome of the revolution. The British cruisers Newcastle and Minerva sailed from Gibraltar to Lisbon, steaming at full speed for Lisbon.

May Involve Britain.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—By a treaty of alliance, Great Britain is bound to afford protection to the King of Portugal if this is the result of the revolution. The French newspapers are urging the government of France not to permit intervention, even if Spain, is French capital will meet to-morrow the deliberations of the Portuguese and the advisability of sending a warship to Lisbon.

No details of the fighting have been received, or any definite estimate of the casualties. A significant incident, according to the Lisbon despatches, is the visit paid by the Spanish minister to the republican leaders after the fall of the palace.

Details of the Fighting.

LISBON, Oct. 5.—The capital is now completely in the hands of the Republicans. It is impossible to estimate the number of killed and wounded in yesterday's fighting, but it is expected to reach several hundred. The city has been considerably damaged by the bombardment.

Thus far, however, no attack has been upon private property, and it is reported that the banks are being guarded by blue jackets.

No news has been received from the provinces, as communication has largely been cut off and despatches and messages of all kinds have been suspended.

All thru the night artillery and rifle fire was incessant and toward dawn it increased. At 11 o'clock last night insurgents, encamped on the heights of Avenida Liberdade, tried to force their way to the centre of the city, but were driven back by the local troops.

As the latter passed the barracks of the first artillery they discovered that it was in the hands of rebel civilians. They charged upon the civilians and dislodged them, with considerable loss to the rebels.

Firing in the Dark.

The night firing was carried on in complete darkness, the electric lights being cut off. The insurgents were by the rebels the effectiveness of their forces were greatly augmented by desertions from among the monarchists, and they succeeded eventually in getting control of the city.

The inhabitants to-day are parading the streets, most of them with rifles in their hands, singing the Portuguese Marseillaise. Red Cross ambulances and parties of police and men from the first brigade are patrolling the streets and removing the dead and wounded.

Eusebio Leao, the Republican leader, made a speech from the balcony of the town hall, saying that he entrusted the policing of the city and the maintenance of order to the care of the citizens.

"Respect all public and private property," he exclaimed, "and the life of all persons, whoever they may be. The Republic is generous and magnanimous." The huge crowd around the building cheered the speaker rapturously. Notwithstanding the thrilling events of the past two days, they are now showing composure, and it seems likely that order in the City of Lisbon will be maintained.

It is rumored that General Goria, who commanded the defending forces, committed suicide when he saw that the fall of the palace was inevitable.

Vatican's Denial.

ROME, Oct. 5.—The Vatican desires to contradict distinctly the statement that King Manuel has been too friendly to the clerical party.

The recent religious troubles in Portugal, and the speech, and throne a few weeks ago, is pointed out, demonstrating the erroneousness of this statement. In that speech the king threatened war against the religious orders, and the holy see expected a repetition in Portugal of the policy which Premier Canalejas is following in Spain.

PARKER, ACCUSED OF MURDER OF MASTERS, OFTEN SAID HE'D SHOOT "ONE OF THE TRIBE."

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 5.—(Special.)—Murderer or innocent man, Robert Parker, accused of killing William Masters April 8 last, certainly advertised his enmity for the deceased in a thoro manner. Most of the crown witnesses appearing for the prosecution at the continuation of the trial here to-day in the court house had been told by Parker that if he ever caught any of Masters' family heading with his traps, there would be trouble. In a number of cases he declared, according to witnesses, that he would shoot if he found one of the "tribe." He described them, stealing from his traps.

Fred Hinds, a clerk in a feed store, swore that Parker had told him that he would shoot Masters. When asked which one, Parker had said, "Bill, that old man. I'd shoot him like a dog." The conversation had taken place in the store witness worked in, about two months before the murder. Witness recollected that Parker had described the Masters family as "dirty trash" and a "pack of thieves." After being told of the killing of Masters, Parker had advanced the conjecture that long range rifles were responsible for it.

Doesn't Look Like Murderer. Parker himself does not impress one as being a man who would cold-bloodedly shoot down a neighbor. During the proceedings he has taken a quiet interest in what was going on. His physiognomy does not show weakness or cowardice, but a certain grimness.

There is a humor in his expression which offsets the grimness. There is a wrinkle on either side of his firm mouth running down his face, which seems to indicate that he could tell a good story or enjoy a bit of wit.

At times during the trial he exhibited nervousness, but only in a slight degree. When anybody went to the witness stand and told him what he would turn his head and watch them, but usually he was motionless, except for his eyes, which would rove from counsel to witness or judge.

Constable Benjamin Sedore brought to light what may prove to be an important point. On his second visit to the residence of the accused, shortly after the crime, he found three cart-ridge shells. One was not disclosed, but the other two were. Witness said that it took some time for cartridges to become disclosed after being discharged.

Bullet Fitted Prisoner's Rifle.

The bullet that had passed thru the body of the deceased, and the rifle produced. The body of the prisoner was the mouth of the rifle snugly fitted the mouth of the bullet became mushroomed in passage. Rifle experts from Toronto will give evidence, probably to-morrow, and may throw more light on the matter.

Mrs. Lillie Palmateer knew something of the prisoner's movements after 11 a.m. on the day of the deed, and she told of his having ridden to Tweed with her, and of having later had tea at her house. Her husband asked him if he had heard what had happened. Parker said he had not and he was told. He asked if Masters had been badly injured by the gunshot. "He's dead," Palmateer had answered.

"Dead," said Parker in a surprised tone of voice, and later added that it was too bad for the old man to be killed, when the probability was that he would not live long anyway.

James Bowers said that Parker had told him that the Masters "tribe" had the habit of robbing his traps, and stealing his wood, and that he would "fix them," if he ever caught them. A peculiar phase of the matter was that the threats seemed to cease about two months before the shooting.

Wm. Henderson had been told by Parker that he would use his rifle, while accused was trapping in July, 1909.

"Isn't July an unusual time to trap?" he was asked.

"They seem to trap whenever they like around here," said witness. Threatened to Shoot.

Mrs. W. Woodcock said that Parker had declared that he would shoot one of the Masters family "like a black snake."

George Lane swore that accused told him that if he met Masters in the woods he would shoot him. "You had not better do that," said Lane. "I would if I had the chance," was the reply.

Parker had drawn his savings, $100, out of the bank on the day of the murder. Andrew Wilson, constable, said that Parker had said that he had drawn it in order to buy out Masters, but that "the old" would not sell.

Mrs. Maggie Cault testified that in driving to Tweed on the morning Masters was killed, at Chapman's Corners, she met Mr. Parker. He was carrying a shotgun over his right shoulder. Parker then crossed over the road and climbed over a fence, which was the last she saw of him.

Charles Holden, a yeoman, was sure he met Parker the morning Masters was killed, and he was carrying a gun. He was near the Chapman's Corners bridge.

Dr. Bowly of Tweed, who had been subpoenaed, had returned to attend a patient without securing permission from Sir William Woodcock, and the chief justice talked about issuing a bench warrant, but finding that Tweed was about three hours away, he adjourned until to-morrow morning.
