So far as England was concerned Canada's loyalty and preference in matters of trade with the former were well-known to the mother country, and have been helpful to her in many respects, as a similar preferential basis of trade relations would be mutually beneficial in business and good feeling between sister colonies like Canada and New Zealand. He had no doubt of our empire builders working out the great problems of the future to the best advantage of the trade and commerce affecting the "homeland" and her forty-eight colonies.

Mr. Grigg declared that being only a few weeks in the country he would not presume to speak on the subject of protection or preferential trade, neither would he touch upon the progress he was making in his mission. But speaking generally, he could not attempt to express, his profound ap-
