Methuen Was in Error.

It is rather a singular coincidence that only a few days ago Lord Methuen wrote that he believed the war would be over in a few months. He based this belief on the alleged will-ingness of sections of the Boer combatants to surrender, and, as he declared, upon a change in the attitude of the Boer women, who, from being remorseless in their hatred of the distriction of the Boer women, who, from being remorseless in their hatred of the distriction of the Boer women, who from being remorseless in their hatred of the thing playing that it is further added that the picking their husbands and brothers to yield.
