Toronto, Jan. 6.-The pig issue got another airing in the public accounts committee. The main matter of interest was the cross-examination of Newton, the butcher who slaughtered the hogs. He stuck to his story, though it is contradicted by other witnesses in no way under the jurisdiction of the government or its officials. Almost the only new features of the case related to its genesis. As is so frequently the case, the moving agency appears to have been a former employe of the government. Newton stated that last fall a man named McKinnon, who was employed in the Central Prison at the time the hogs were placed in the cold storage room, came to his house inquiring after a horse which he (Newton) had for sale. The horse does not appear to have long engaged the caller's attention, for at their second meeting Newton's share in the holocaust of hogs was introduced. Mc Kinnon urged Newton to call on a lawyer named Bradford and tell what he knew about the hogs. He said it would be worth money to him to do so. He did not go to Bradford, however Some time after messengers began arriving from Mr. St. John urging Newton to call on him. Among these messengers was a man named Henderson, who was also at one time employed in the Central Prison. The Witness Newton at length went to both Mr. Bradford's and Mr. St. John's offices. The former he saw once, but he had

tee. This was his story as brought out by the cross-examination of Messrs. Garrow and German. A man named Dunn followed. Dunn was one of Newton's assistants, and, so far as he went, told a similar story. Every one of the animals slaughtered, he declared, was diseased. His examination was not concluded when the committe rose. The investigation is retting decidedly wearisome. Not a

The government are not affected by the matter at all, as they did their whole duty when they passed the matter over to the Dominion veterinary visiting at his home in Glencoe, has returned to Middlemiss to resume his proceedings of the committee will incline to the opinion that the carcasses sold were sound, and will account for the evidence of Newton and of Dunn in various ways, nor need the requisite explanation be discreditable to these witnesses. They did kill a lot of diseased hogs, and it merely requires a little unconscious exaggeration, superinduced by conferences with biased politicians, to swell the number to the dimensions of all that were killed. In the house, the compensation clause in Mr. Dryden's bill for the ex-tirpation of the San Jose pest was the subject of warm debate in the early afternoon. The bill proposes to compensate fruitmen whose trees have to e destroyed to prevent the spread of the pest, to the extent of one-fourth of the value. The opposition advanced wo views on this proposal. Mr. Crawford thought no compensation should e given, while Col. Matheson wanted to put in the bill a provision for appealing from any decision as to value.

Mr. Hiscott, who lives in a fruit section, opposed Mr. Crawford's view, although Mr. Gibson, of Huron, expression, as to Columbia to the columbia to the columbia to provide the columbia to prov ed some sympathy with it.
